Clinton sells 'Carter mobile,' keynoter Gramm tells GOP

The Associated Press

HOUSTON (AP) — Sen. Phil Gramm, in the Tuesday night keynote address to the Republican National Convention, ridiculed Democrat Bill Clinton's promise of change as hollow as a used car salesman's.

Gramm sneered at Clinton's ideas as reminiscent of former President Jimmy Carter's presidency. "It was a lemon for the nation in the 70's ... and it is still a lemon today," said Gramm, a one-time Democrat.

Gramm, a 14-year veteran of the House and Senate, made a searching condemnation of Congress, saying more Americans would be working, the budget deficit smaller and health care more available if Congress had followed President Bush's lead.

"But the Democrats said no," Gramm told the convention.

Bush, meanwhile, said in a television interview he would make many changes in his cabinet if elected to a second term. That set the convention floor abuzz with speculation about who might go or stay in such an overhaul.

The Texas senator gave Presidents Reagan and Bush credit for toppling the Soviets with a defense buildup and tough policies that needed no congressional approval.

Bush led an international army to push Iraq out of the Middle East, he said, after "we shamed enough Democrats in Congress into supporting the president."

But Democrats refuse to enact Bush's tax, economic, budget-cutting and health care ideas, Gramm said, instead nominating Clinton and talking about change.

"At the New York convention, Clinton was like a used car salesman peddling his vehicle for change — the wax job was shiny, the hubcaps sparkled, the upholstery was spotless, the paint was new," Gramm said.

"But when you look under the hood, you discover he is hawking a model from the 70's — a Carter mobile with the axle broken and the frame bent to the left. It was a lemon for the nation in the 70's when it sent inflation through the roof and income through the floor, and it is still a lemon today."

Kemp pick for '96 – A3

The pugnacious Texan said Clinton's economic proposals would raise taxes and federal spending by more than those of previous nominees Walter Mondale and Michael Dukakis combined.

He also ridiculed Clinton's record in Arkansas, claiming the state ranks 50th in average family income, jobs for young people, environmental policy and law enforcement funding.

The Clinton campaign quickly answered.

"Tonight Phil Gramm turned the Astrodome into the Republican hall of blame," said Clinton communications director George Stephanopoulos. "His facts and figures were as authentic as Astroturf."

Clinton himself, campaigning in Atlanta, told reporters: "Tell him to look at the BLS (Bureau of Labor Statistics) report. We're number one in job growth."

Bennett sues judges, bar, ex-partner

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Attorney Golden Bennett has responded to misconduct charges filed against him by the Idaho State Bar with a federal lawsuit of his own.

"It's a hairy thing I'm doing," Bennett said. "I wouldn't do it if I didn't think I was right about this."

In his 14-count complaint, Bennett says a whole host of characters are involved in a conspiracy to interfere with his business, deprive him of his civil rights and damage his reputation.

That list includes the Idaho State Bar Association, magistrate judges R. Barry Wood and Donald Workman, Bennett's former partner Hyong Pak, Twin Falls attorneys Randy Stoker and Paula Brown-Sinclair, individual attorneys on the Bar Commission and Madeline Fejeran of Boise.

Bennett

The bar association charged Bennett last month with misconduct, alleging that he overcharged Fejeran and misused her personal property while representing her on a probation violation in 1989.

"It's all part of a conspiracy, I now see," Bennett said.

Such a charge is "absurd," said Michael Oths, counsel for the Bar Association. The bar association, which oversees judicial ethics among its members, has recommended that Bennett be suspended from practicing law for two years.

"Politics is not our motivation," Oths said. "When the complaint was ripe for filing, it was filed."

Bennett said the bar association has an interest in keeping "the little guy" like himself out of the profession because he advertises and charges lower rates than other attorneys.

He has not yet filed a response to the bar association's complaint, but has been granted an extension. Bennett also filed a separate action demanding that the disciplinary complaint be moved into

Boisean bears message to party from New West

The Associated Press

HOUSTON — U.S. Senate candidate and Boise Mayor Dirk Kempthorne brought the Republican National Convention — and voters in Idaho — a message from the New West Tuesday.

Kempthorne, running for the seat being vacated by retiring two-term GOP Sen. Steve Symms, spoke to a dwindling crowd at the Astrodome while the 22-member Idaho delegation, and a few recruits from nearby state delegations, cheered and waved banners.

Kempthorne compared the rugged individualism of the cowboy who conquered the Old West to the young workers and business entrepreneurs of today. Both, he said, are heroes.

"Today's heroes are challenged in ways our traditional heroes were never challenged," he said. "Challenged by their own government with mandates that drive their ambitions to despair; with government regulations which crush their dreams into nightmares."

He was introduced by Mississippi Sen. Trent Lott, who said Idaho's capital has flourished under Kempthorne's stewardship.

"What we need in there is a few more good Republican mayors who know how to balance a budget," Lott said.

Kempthorne was one of 39 GOP candidates each given about three minutes in the national spotlight to boost their campaigns by a party determined to make inroads into the

First lady now symbol of pitch for middle class

By Thomas B. Edsall
The Washington Post

Analysis

HOUSTON — When Barbara Bush speaks to the Republican National Convention tonight, she will be an important symbol of a concerted effort by the Republican Party for the heart and soul of middle-class white America.

With pocketbook issues currently working to the advantage of Bill Clinton and the Democratic Party, Republican strategists plan their own offensive on the question of "family values" — a convenient catch-all phrase for a series of deeply polarizing sexual, cultural and racial conflicts arising from the changing role of women, the gay-rights movement, the deterioration of the nuclear family and the emergence of minority-preference civil-rights policies.

Describing the party's goals, a Republican strategist uses the langague of social science to distinguish between two sharply different world views:

"Our purpose is to define George Bush and the Republican Party as the proponent of fundamental social norms in terms of the family, in terms of sexual behavior and in terms of reward for work. Conversely, we intend to define Clinton and the Democrats as advocates of individual fulfillment, without regard to generally held values and beliefs."

The touchstones of this conflict will be gay rights, school choice, welfare policy and a sustained Republican drive

Hot tubs, saunas tied to birth defects, study finds

The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Women who use hot tubs or saunas during early pregnancy face up to triple the risk of bearing babies with spina bifida or brain defects, a large study has found.

Although further research is needed, this is the first study to establish in humans what has been known for decades in other mammals — that exposing very young fetuses to heat, whether from outside or from fever in the mother, can be dangerous, a co-author said.

"To our surprise, there was no doubt that use of the hot tub by mothers in the first six weeks of pregnancy ... increased risk by two or three times," said Dr. Aubrey Milunsky, the study's lead author.

"There was a similar risk for saunas," he said Monday by telephone from Boston University School of Medicine, where he directs the Center for Human Genetics. However, he added: "We found electric blankets had no effect."

A report on the study of 22,762 women is published Wednesday in The Journal of the American Medical Association.

Saunas and hot tubs already typically carry warnings against use during pregnancy.

"We recommend women who are pregnant consult with their doctors about the use of saunas," said Ted Barker, a sales manager for Nassco Inc. of Bellevue, Wash., the nation's largest sauna maker.

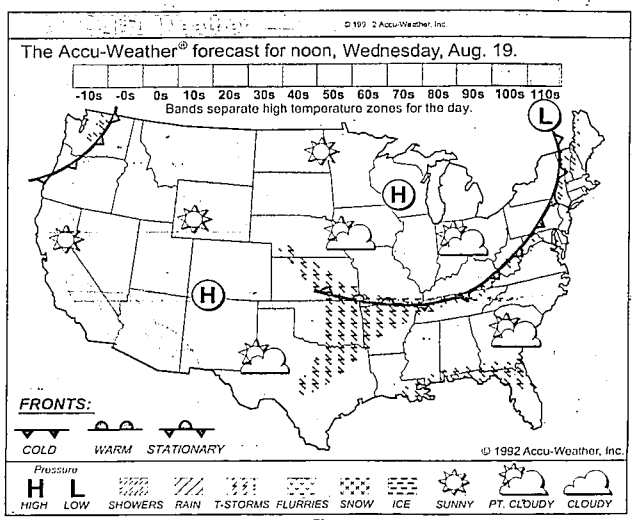

Saunas usually range in temperature from 170 to 190 degrees Fahrenheit, while the water in hot tubs ranges from about 100 to 104 degrees, he said in a telephone interview.

Milunsky said the study was designed to explore other issues, such as whether prenatal vitamin supplements protect against birth defects, and did not include detailed questions about hot tubs and saunas.

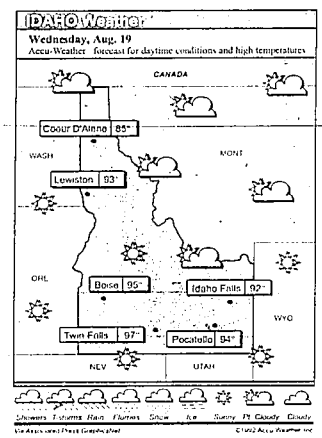

"We did not obtain information about duration of heat, temperature and frequency with which it was used," he said. "We never asked about a regular hot bath. We plan to do that kind of study."

The cooler air will push across the Cascades Wednesday and into Idaho by Friday.

A few light showers fell in northern and eastern Idaho.

The hottest temperature in the state Tuesday was 103 degrees at Hagerman, Stanley, Bovill and Yellow Pine reported the coolest at 42 degrees.

Elsewhere in the nation Tuesday, the highest temperature was 119 degrees at Lake Havasu City, Ariz. The lowest was 42 degrees at Bismarck, N.D.

South chilly and wet but Southwest swelters

The Associated Press

Temperatures dropped to record lows again Tuesday in the lower Mississippi Valley and the South, and rain was scattered along parts of the Gulf Coast and up the East Coast.

Record low temperatures mostly in the 40s and low 60s were reported Tuesday for at least 29 cities in Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Kentucky and Alabama.

It was the third consecutive morning of record low temperatures for Austin, Texas, at 65; Baton Rouge, La., at 66; Huntsville, Ala., at 58; and Lake Charles, La., also at 66.

Fort Smith, Ark., cooled to 58, toppling a record of 62 that had stood since 1897. The low of 63 at Montgomery, Ala., chopped 2 degrees off the former record set in 1879.

Morning lows were generally in the upper 40s and 50s from the northern and central high Plains to the Great Lakes.

But afternoon temperatures were in the 80s and lower 90s from south-central Texas to the southern Atlantic Coast.

Thermometers topped the 100-degree mark in some communities in the West and Southwest even before the heat of the day set in. Needles reported 102 at 10 a.m. Death Valley expected a ninth straight day over 120.

Sacramento, Calif., recorded its 36th consecutive day over 90 degrees. Phoenix, Ariz., hit 113 on Monday and expected the same Tuesday.

At midday, showers and a few thunderstorms associated with a stationary front lingered over eastern Pennsylvania, eastern New York state and New England.

Showers and thunderstorms associated with the same general frontal system extended across the central Gulf Coast.

Showers and a few thunderstorms associated with an upper level weather system were scattered from Oklahoma to west-central Texas.

And a few showers and thunderstorms associated with a cold front spread across the upper Great Lakes.

Allen denies molestation charges

NEW YORK — Rocked by a week of headlines about his private life, Woody Allen charged Tuesday that he was falsely accused of molesting his two youngest children in a heinous scheme by his ex-lover, Mia Farrow, to retain custody.

"This is an unconscionable and gruesomely damaging manipulation of innocent children for vindictive and self-serving motives," the reclusive filmmaker told reporters at a rare public appearance.

Allen

Allen said Farrow's lawyers had demanded $7 million in exchange for them not taking allegations against him to Connecticut state police. He said he refused. Connecticut police confirmed he's a suspect in a criminal investigation.

Farrow's spokesman, John Springer, said he had never heard of the alleged offer. He added that the swelling controversy has upset his client.

Allen, 56, filed a lawsuit against Farrow last week demanding custody of their three children.

Centers picked for gulf war ailments

WASHINGTON — The Veterans Affairs Department on Tuesday designated medical centers in West Los Angeles, Houston and the District of Columbia to handle Persian Gulf veterans suffering from mysterious ailments.

Some soldiers returning from the Middle East have complained of maladies including fatigue, depression, hair loss, aching joints, rashes and sore and bleeding gums.

The symptoms are believed to be related to environmental contaminants, including fumes from oil fields set on fire by fleeing Iraqi troops.

Restaurant workers slain in robbery

TULSA, Okla. — Four young restaurant workers were ordered into a walk-in refrigerator, made to kneel down and shot in the head by robbers, police said Tuesday.

A former employee was arrested in the killings.

"I can't answer what compels a person to do that. The only motivation we're aware of is robbery," said Sgt. Wayne Allen, chief homicide detective.

The four employees of Lee's Famous Recipe Country Chicken were found after closing time Monday by a friend of one of the workers. Three were dead, and one died later in a hospital. They ranged in age from 17 to 26.

Nation's blood supply declared safe

BETHESDA, Md. — America's blood supply is not threatened by a possible new AIDS virus and is as safe as it has ever been, health officials said Tuesday.

"Currently there is insufficient evidence to change the operation of our blood programs," said Peter Tomasulo, the head of the American Red Cross, the nation's largest blood processing organization.

Red Cross officials and executives of other blood banking organizations met with experts from the Centers for Disease Control to discuss research that has uncovered patients who have low counts of immune cells.

federal court because he cannot get a fair hearing before the bar association.

The misconduct charge was being investigated simultaneously with a civil charge by Fejeran against Bennett, which was settled out of court. Sinclair, who represented Fejeran in the civil case, denied being part of a conspiracy to harm Bennett's legal practice.

Bennett said he returned the disputed property, along with $1,000, to Fejeran, but admitted no wrongdoing.

His suit does not outline what part each of the defendants had in the alleged conspiracy, and Bennett declined to talk about individual defendants until they had been served with summonses.

Bennett has a history of conflicts with some of the defendants, especially Stoker.

Their paths first crossed in the Jaimi Charboneau murder case in Jerome County, when Charboneau's mother hired Bennett. Charboneau fired him in March 1985 and Stoker took over.

Bennett said Stoker criticized him for taking the unusual step of putting Charboneau on the witness stand before the trial began, and the two also clashed over Bennett's similar handling of another Jerome murder case a year and a half later.

Stoker could not be reached for comment Tuesday.

Most recently, Stoker took over for Bennett in the Jerry Fino murder case in Rupert. Fino is charged with the murder of Rupert pawnbroker Randy Walker.

In a June hearing, Bennett opted out of the case by saying that he was not qualified to handle a capital case under the guidelines being used by Wood, who is the presiding judge in the case.

He also said that his office staff was inadequate to handle the case and that he had a conflict of interest because of his campaign for prosecutor in Twin Falls County.

Bennett said he wanted to handle the case, but could not after the Wood adopted the American Bar Association guidelines to select counsel in capital cases.

Stoker has been appointed to handle the Fino case, although Bennett says he advised Fino's family not to accept Stoker as his attorney.

The Fino case is also the spot where judges Wood and Workman enter the conspiracy picture. Workman was the first judge to handle the Fino case, but Bennett dismissed him early on.

In his order after that June hearing, Wood recalls a conversation between himself and Bennett in the Jerome County Courthouse.

Bennett came into the judge's chambers and said, "almost verbatim," according to Wood, "Judge Wood, do you have the balls to throw out a first-degree murder charge at a preliminary hearing?"

The judge responded by saying "Golden, what in the hell are you talking about?"

Bennett asked the judge if he were willing to take the inevitable political heat for dismissing the Fino case at the preliminary hearing stage.

But Wood said he had not at the time heard of the Fino case and would not be allowed to talk about it if he had.

Bennett says that conversation with Wood did take place, but says he used the words "courage" instead of "balls."

Wood said Tuesday that he had not seen Bennett's suit and declined to comment.

Bennett's former partner, Hyong Pak, said he did not leave on the best of terms but was surprised to be named in the suit.

"He's really off track," Pak said. He left Bennett's Law Clinic in September 1991 after only four months there.

"We differed in the way we handled our business," Pak said.

Sinclair wondered why she would be involved in a conspiracy against Bennett when she already has more clients than she can handle.

"I couldn't absorb any more clients if they pounded on my door," she said.

to portray Barbara Bush as the epitome of grandmotherly maternalism in contrast — sometimes explicit, sometimes implicit — to a Hillary Clinton defined as the essence of hard-edged feminism.

These themes have already shaped Bush's campaign appearances.

"I stake my claim to a simple belief: the president should try to set a moral tone for this nation," Bush told the Knights of Columbus earlier this month in New York. "I believe that a central issue of this election year should be who do you trust to renew America's moral purpose, who do you trust to fight for the ideas that will help rebuild our families and restore our fundamental values."

Monday night, Pat Buchanan pushed conservative-values themes to the edge of the envelope when he declared: "The agenda that Clinton and Clinton (Bill and Hillary) would impose on America — abortion on demand, a litmus test for the Supreme Court, homosexual rights, discrimination against religious schools, women in combat units — that's change all right, but it's not the kind of change America needs."

"I am a product of the change the Republican Party has brought to America," he said.

Kempthorne was the only Idahoan scheduled to address the four-day convention. The delegation passed out hats, stickers and held up signs as Kempthorne took the podium.

His speech was late in the session and hundreds of delegates had already left. Still, Idaho GOP Chairman Blake Hall made sure the delegation made a good showing. He had some help.

Ellie Schafer, a delegate from North Dakota, cut a deal with the Idaho group: "We'll cheer our pants off for your candidate, if you cheer for ours," she said.

Pat Kempthorne, the candidate's wife, said she was thrilled for her husband. "He did great," she said. "It's wonderful. He will really make a difference."

Delegates make Kemp the clear favorite for nomination in 1996

HOUSTON (AP) — Jack Kemp, the conservative cheerleader for Reagan-style tax cuts, is the clearcut favorite here for the 1996 GOP presidential nomination in a survey of this year's delegates.

Dan Quayle trails far behind; Phil Gramm is an asterisk.

Kemp's supporters seemed to be the most enthusiastic, too. "He is one conservative who can deliver the conservative message in a way that even blacks can support," said delegate Richard Finley of Birmingham, Ala.

A sign over the Oregon delegation to the GOP convention read:

Bush Now
Kemp Next
Clinton Not

Kemp, secretary of Housing and Urban Affairs, an advocate of capital gains tax cuts and enterprise zones to boost inner cities, had the support of a third of the Republican delegates surveyed by Associated Press reporters.

Vice President Quayle drew just under 10 percent. More than half of the convention's 2,210 delegates participated.

Some feared Quayle's image as inept is beyond redemption.

"Personally, I like the vice president," said Franklin Rozier Jr. of Georgia. "But ... the media has almost buried the man."

Secretary of State James A. Baker III — George Bush's Mister Fixit, alter ego and soon to be his chief of staff — comes in third, his support scattered over the map.

Baker even edged out Phil Gramm, a combative ex-Democrat Texas senator with a Ph.D. in economics and clear presidential ambitions. But that was before Gramm delivered Tuesday night's keynote address that he hoped would boost his visibility. He had the support of about 5 percent of the delegates, many from Texas.

While Quayle brushed aside questions about his ambitions, Gramm has been the most forthright. He sponsored receptions for delegates from three states with early presidential primary tests — Iowa, New Hampshire and Georgia.

"Anybody who has ever been elected to city council who tells you they haven't thought about being president is not telling the truth," Gramm told a reporter.

Twenty-seven percent were noncommital.

"I hope between now and 1996, somebody comes out who's a little more vibrant," said delegate Barbara J. Czop, a bookkeeper from Collegeville, Pa. "We need some new life in this party."

Other potential candidates who drew a few notices include Patrick Buchanan, Bush's challenger this year who is believed eager to run again; Red Cross President Elizabeth Dole ("just one dynamite woman," said a North Dakota delegate); Secretary of Education Lamar Alexander, the former governor of Tennessee; Defense Secretary Dick Cheney; Massachusetts Gov. William Weld; retiring New Hampshire Sen. Warren Rudman, and California Gov. Pete Wilson.

Reviews on Quayle were decidedly mixed. Some saw him as damaged goods, others as the heir apparent.

GOP launches attack on convention media

HOUSTON (AP) — Republicans are angry and not just at Bill Clinton and the Democrats.

Barbara Bush and GOP Chairman Rich Bond led an attack Tuesday on a target closer at hand: the reporters covering their convention.

Mrs. Bush complained about "disgusting and despicable" coverage of allegations that President Bush had an affair. And Bond angrily crumpled a copy of the Houston Chronicle containing a story about Vice President Dan Quayle.

Republican complaints about press coverage are nothing new, but they have been escalating this year as stories have focused on Bush's fall in the polls and Democrat Bill Clinton's rise. Media bashing has become a sort of sub-theme of the convention.

The news media, South Carolina Gov. Carroll Campbell complained, "have become a distorted mirror on America." Delegates — at least some of them — have complained loudly and bitterly about coverage of the campaign and the convention.

Some reporters have taken to wearing buttons saying, "It's All My Fault, I'm in the Media."

Mrs. Bush made her complaints during an interview with Cable News Network. "I think it's been a despicable year," she said. "I think people should be ashamed of themselves."

Bond was angry over a Chronicle article titled "Quayle tries to play up martyr role." The story, buried deep inside the Houston newspaper, was about Quayle's response to jokes and criticism.

"That's a little less than even-handed, OK?" the GOP chairman said.

"We thought the story and the headline were both fair," the Chronicle's political editor, Jim Simmon, said. "We were never clear about what his problem was."

Not everyone agrees that coverage has been unfair. Among a sampling of delegates interviewed on the convention floor Tuesday, a substantial minority believed the news media have been fair.

"I would give the media a B grade in general," Ernest Dronenburg Jr. of California said. "I think they really do try to be fair ... The press, since Watergate, has been very adversarial. But I don't think they're any more adversarial toward Republicans than Democrats."

But Lester Firstenberger, a Tennessee delegate, said that television reporters in particular try "to put their bias or liberal spin on what is coming out of here." Still, he said, "Try as they might, the media isn't able to stop the true message of the party from getting out."

Barbara Bush tours convention

HOUSTON (AP) — A smiling, waving, handshaking, Democrat-bashing Bush made the rounds at the Republican National Convention on Tuesday, but it wasn't George.

It was his wife, Barbara, the one with the superior poll ratings.

Accompanied by a small army of security guards and White House handlers, Mrs. Bush dropped in on the American Spirit Pavilion to sample the Republican souvenir booths stacked high with convention T-shirts, goofy hats, gaudy jewelry, "GOP" cowboy boots and every other imaginable piece of campaign paraphernalia.

She didn't buy anything, but she stopped several times to pose for the television cameras and news photographers. She held up to the cameras a T-shirt with a friendly caricature of her husband, then posed in front of a bookstore stand with copies of her tome, "Millie's Book, As Related To Barbara Bush."

In a breakfast speech to a group of black Republicans, the first lady gave a hard pitch for her husband's re-election and promised to "work our hearts out" until Election Day.

"Thanks to George Bush, we have a freer, safer world," she said. "Thanks to George Bush, we have cleaner air in our country, and ... we have two civil rights bills."

In a dig at the Democrat-controlled Congress, Mrs. Bush recalled that her husband has vetoed 31 bills in the past 3½ years — "stopping really bad, Democrat, job-stopping bills."

Later, Mrs. Bush got her first up-close look at the convention setup inside the Astrodome.

She checked out the speaker's platform where she'll deliver a prime-time speech to the delegates on Wednesday. Throughout the day she sought to dampen expectations.

Asked by a reporter how the speech text was coming along, she replied, "It's terrible."

Asked what the main theme will be, she said, "I'm changing my mind daily.

"You're not going to wake up Thursday morning and say, 'Wow! You're going to wake up and say, 'Huh?'"

In a television interview, Mrs. Bush said she found it "unbelievable" that her recent comment about the abortion issue not belonging in the party platform had been widely interpreted as meaning she favors a woman's right to choose abortion.

She steadfastly refused to say whether she agreed with her husband's anti-abortion stance.

"You know, I have a lot of friends here who are pro-life; I have a lot of friends here who are pro-choice," she said in the Cable News Network interview. "All of us have one thing in common — we're pro-Bush."

Mrs. Bush also took a few shots at the news media. She singled out the reporting last spring of accusations that Democratic nominee Bill Clinton had a 12-year affair with an Arkansas woman and the more recent reports of rumors that President Bush had spent the night alone with a female aide, Jennifer Fitzgerald, in a Swiss cottage.

Campaign nabs veterans to strengthen advertising

HOUSTON (AP) — The Bush campaign has lured back two political retirees — admaker Roger Ailes and strategist Mitch Daniels — to shore up perceived weaknesses in communication and advertising, two campaign officials said Tuesday.

One campaign adviser said the move was part of a "leaner-meaner-campaign shakeup" initiated by incoming White House chief of staff James A. Baker III that might also include some cuts in mid-level staff.

Ailes, who helped put Republicans in the White House the last three elections with his stinging ads, isn't expected to take over the Madison Avenue ad team Bush has assembled for the fall election.

The adviser said the campaign and Ailes are still jockeying over his exact role and he probably ultimately would settle into an adviser's role simply helping the ad team "get more political focus."

Daniels, who was White House political director for Ronald Reagan in 1984, left Washington to run the Hudson Institute, a conservative think tank in Indianapolis. He returned to help manage Dan Quayle's troubled campaign in 1988. Afterwards, he became an executive of a drug company.

Home building falls in July

WASHINGTON (AP) — Construction of single-family homes and apartments fell 2.8 percent in July, the government said Tuesday.

However, analysts predicted that the lowest mortgage rates in nearly two decades will halt any further erosion.

Robert Villanueva, an economist for the National Association of Home Builders, said surveys of the organization's membership early this month showed that builders plan to boost construction modestly.

"Not a surge," he said, "but certainly a solid increase."

In July, however, housing starts fell in every region except the South, which posted a slight gain.

Many analysts had expected construction to rise last month following the sharp drop in mortgage rates after the Federal Reserve slashed two short-term interest rates on July 2. Fixed-rate, 30-year mortgages now are below 8 percent for the first time in nearly 20 years.

Instead, the Commerce Department reported, housing starts dropped to 1.12 million at a seasonally adjusted annual rate, down from a 1.15 million rate in June, when they fell 3.8 percent.

"It really does show how cautious builders are," said economist David Berson of the Federal National Mortgage Association. But he said the low rates and an increase in new home sales in June, the first in five months, should improve confidence.

An increase in the number of applications for building permits in July also suggested renewed housing activity. Applications, often a barometer of future construction, rose 3.7 percent for the first advance in five months.

Still, most analysts expect housing activity to remain muted this year, although improved over last year, when starts fell to 1.01 million, the lowest since 1945. So far, starts are 21 percent above the first seven months of 1991.

"People are still worried about jobs and incomes," Berson contended. "It's really a problem of confidence."

David Lereah, an economist with the Mortgage Bankers Association, agreed that growth in residential construction will be modest.

"Low interest rates have done all they could for the housing market," he said. "We need help from other sectors of the economy."

The Commerce report showed that single-family housing starts dropped 4.1 percent to a 959,000 annual rate after falling 1.9 percent in June.

But apartment construction rose 6.0 percent, to 160,000 units, after declining 14.7 percent a month earlier.

Regionally, starts were up only in the South, a slight 0.4 percent advance to a 457,000 rate.

Bay area least affordable

WASHINGTON (AP) — People living in Jackson, Mich., enjoyed the most affordable housing in America as summer began, according to a survey released Tuesday by the National Association of Home Builders.

Those shopping for homes outside the Midwest might look at the Brazoria, Texas, area in the South; or Greeley, Colo., in the West, or Nashua, N.H., in the Northeast. They were the most affordable in their regions.

Pass San Francisco, however. It was the most expensive metropolitan area in the home builders' survey. The least affordable cities in other regions were Chicago in the Midwest; El Paso, Texas, in the South, and New York in the Northeast.

Jackson scored 91.1 on the Home Builders' Housing Affordability Index. That meant that 91.1 percent of the homes sold during the second quarter could have been purchased at prevailing interest rates by a family earning the area's median income. The median income in Jackson during the April-June period was $36,800.

U.S., Japan reinforced units after Battle of Savo Island

Editor's note: This is another in series of articles concerning events during World War II which occurred 50 years ago this week.

Knight-Ridder News Service

After the Battle of Savo Island, both the U.S. and Japan worked to reinforce their units on Guadalcanal.

Destroyers acting as fast transports brought supplies to the Marines on Aug. 13 and 20. The 1st Marine Engineer Battalion worked to finish the airfield started by the Japanese. It was named Henderson Field in memory of Maj. Lofton Henderson, a Marine pilot who had crashed his plane into a Japanese ship at the Battle of Midway.

The runway was ready when a dozen SBD dive bombers of VMSB-232 and nineteen F4F Wildcat fighters of VMF-223 arrived on Aug. 20. Two days later the first P-400s (the export version of the P-39 Airacobra) of the Army's 67th Fighter Squadron arrived.

The U.S. could keep Henderson Field in operation, it would dominate the waters around Guadalcanal and thus the island could be held. But the Japanese had plans to the contrary.

Gen. Kiyonao Ichiki, who had been unable to fulfill the honor given him of commanding the landing on Midway Island, was now assigned the task of retaking Guadalcanal. On Aug. 18 he moved 916 men to the island aboard six destroyers without being seen. However, after the destroyers had bombarded Henderson Field, one took off from the B-17s sent after them from Espiritu Santo.

Gen. Ichiki, like his superiors at Rabaul, thought there were only 2,000 Marines on the island. He moved confidently to the attack.

The Marines were alerted to Ichiki's presence when an ocean patrol ambushed a Japanese patrol and captured a number of documents. The 1st Marine Regiment set up a five-mile defensive line along the west bank of the Tenaru River. They had barbed wire and one 37 mm anti-tank gun with canister (grapeshot) ammunition.

At 1:30 a.m. on Aug. 21, 200 Japanese troops made a furious charge against the 2nd Battalion across a sandbar along a 45 yard front. Machine guns and hand grenades gave way to rifle butts, bayonets and swords as the fighting became hand-to-hand. Flares cast an eerie light across the otherwise dark battlefield.

Cpl. Dean Wilson's automatic rifle jammed as three of the enemy rushed him. Pulling out a machete, he struck down all three. Lt. Col. Al Pollock committed his reserves and drove the enemy back. By daybreak every Japanese who had crossed the stream was dead.

Now the Marines went after the rest of Ichiki's force.

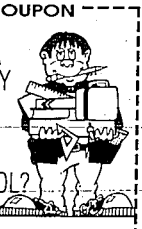

The 1st Battalion crossed upstream and flanked the Japanese, pinning them between the 2nd Battalion and the coast. The enemy tried to break out to the southwest, mounting another determined attack. They were thrown back with the Marines launching their own bayonet charge. At 4 p.m., a platoon of Marine light tanks lumbered across the sandbar. The Japanese had nothing left to stop them.

Some of the enemy ran for the ocean, others tried to slip through the jungle to the east.

Others played dead only to rise up to shoot Marines in the back. But most died where they stood, fighting to the end as was the Japanese trademark. Ichiki and some of his officers, seeing they were defeated, committed suicide.

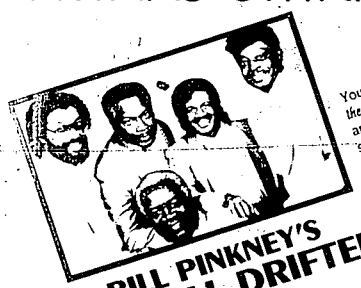

Over 700 enemy bodies were counted by evening. The Marines had lost 35 dead and 75 wounded, many during the mop-up operations.

The first, but not the last, Japanese counterattack had been smashed.

Why our $59 eyeglasses are worth more than theirs

Lately there's been a lot of hoopla from our higher-priced competitors about their new low prices.
The new "low prices" take up a huge portion of the ads. Yet, if you get to the stores, how many frames do you think you'll find at that price? Would you be disappointed if there were only 12 or 15?
Unfortunately, it makes it even harder for you to believe that our low prices are really on the level. Few companies operate with the cost-cutting efficiency required to succeed at prices this low.
Our $59 price is complete—including frames and single vision plastic lenses. Additional pairs, same prescription and visit, are just $39. Most bifocals just $20 more. So two pairs cost just $98. And no extra charge for oversize or almost all high power lenses.
You don't wear the price tag
Still, the biggest difference between us and them is our selection. Our $59 and $39 prices include a choice from over 400 fashionable frames—the vast majority of frames in our store.
From the fashionably conservative to the cutting edge of today's styles, these include designs from St. Moritz, Converse, REM, Zimco, Renaissance, Enrico Biaggi & more. For $20 to $90 more, we carry specialty designers like Liz Claiborne, Anne Klein, Ray Ban, Logo of Paris, Cheryl Tiegs & others.

Convoy rescues Sarajevo women, children

A woman being evacuated from Sarajevo cries as she says goodbye to a friend.

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Nearly 1,000 women and children escaped Sarajevo and the terrors of war Tuesday as the international airlift of food and medicine again was threatened.

A convoy carrying the women and children left for Belgrade, the Serbian and Yugoslav capital. The United Nations provided two armored cars as escorts.

Bosnian Serb officials in Pale, the Serb forces' headquarters 12 miles east of Sarajevo, said the 17-bus convoy had arrived there and was not expected to reach Belgrade before midnight. It had been guaranteed safe passage by the Serb militias, and was unlikely to encounter trouble on Serb-held territory.

But back in Sarajevo, signs of war abounded.

Hundreds of people began moving back into a refugee hotel that was hit by four mortar rounds late Monday and set ablaze. Bosnian radio said at least five people died.

Radar from unidentified forces locked onto a British Hercules C-130 aid plane as it was leaving the airport, U.N. officials at the airport and the British Defense Ministry said.

Locking on with radar is a possible first step to firing, but there was no confirmation that the plane was fired on.

The airport was closed indefinitely to relief airlifts, but not to flights of peacekeeping troops, U.N. spokeswoman Nadia Younes said in New York.

It was not immediately known how many aid flights were canceled Tuesday. The airport has been closed several times since U.N. officials secured it June 29.

The convoy of mothers and children was the second to leave Sarajevo under an agreement among warring factions. Last week, about 300 Croat and Muslim women and children left for Croatia and Austria under the agreement, which many residents fear heralds a final assault on the besieged city.

The Belgrade-based Tanjug news agency said about 65 percent of those who left on Tuesday's convoy were Serbs.

"There's no food, that's why I have to leave my city," said Ljiljana Beslema, 27, whose 6-year-old son, Branko, wept at leaving his grandparents behind.

Inspector: U.S. not in charge

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — The leader of a U.N. weapons inspection team returned from Iraq on Tuesday saying he takes no orders from Washington and had ignored reports that he would provoke a confrontation with Saddam Hussein.

Russian Nikita Smidovich confirmed that his team did not visit Iraqi ministries. He said the Iraqis did not say ministries were off-limits to inspectors.

"Only the (U.N.) Special Commission decides where and when the inspection teams go," Smidovich told reporters at the end of his team's 10-day mission.

The New York Times reported Sunday that on Monday, Smidovich's last inspection day, he would attempt to inspect an Iraqi ministry. The paper said the visit would be designed to provoke a confrontation and a U.S.-led military strike.

Performer's arrow kills trumpet player

AUBENAS, France (AP) — A trumpet player in a traveling circus was struck in the face and killed when a crossbow arrow went astray during an act, police said Tuesday.

Krysztof Baschuz, 24, of Poland, was struck under the eye Monday night at the Christiane Gruss circus. He died of brain damage Tuesday at a hospital in Aubenas, in south-central France, police said.

"The circus archer, Tony Bertolazzi, was trying to burst a small balloon held by a partner about 30 feet away. The arrow flew past a protective shield set up behind the target and into the orchestra area.

Bertolazzi, son of the circus manager, was questioned by police but not held.

The troupe was to resume performances Tuesday night.

Refugees inhabit charred hotel

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — The Hotel Europa, with its French windows and Old World charm, was an emblem of all that was cosmopolitan about Sarajevo.

Then it became an emblem of Bosnia's suffering. It filled with 1,500 refugees from the civil war and on Monday night it burned. Four mortar rounds fired from the precipitous hills above the city plowed into the five-story building, killing at least five people and injuring 14.

One victim, a police officer, was killed by shells as he tried to save some of the refugees. Sniper fire ricocheted up nearby alleys, and more people likely would have died if not for another brave policeman.

As tongues of flame licked the hotel's rafters, he held a crowd of hundreds inside the lobby. True to his fears, more rounds fell. Whoever attacked had wanted more to die.

But on Tuesday, with nowhere else to go, many of those same people trickled back.

"It blew my son's leg off," said Behia Aslatina, sitting quietly on a bed Tuesday. "He's 8 years old, and now he will be cripple forever."

Aslatina, from eastern Bosnia, said she wanted to leave. But like the others, she had nowhere to go.

"They will bomb us again and again and again," she said. "Maybe they will kill us all."

The source of the attack was not known. But Serb fighters perched in the hills surrounding the capital have been able to attack it almost at will and often appear to target civilians.

"There is no end to this," said Senia Fazlic, a 34-year-old mother and former clerk from the eastern Bosnian city of Visegrad. "The whole world is watching, and there's no end."

Train collision leaves 8 dead, many injured

SOFIA, Bulgaria (AP) — A freight train went through a stop signal and was rammed by a passenger train filled with vacationers, killing at least eight people and injuring more than 60, officials said Tuesday.

The drivers of the freight train were arrested and fired from their jobs. Twenty-one senior officials from the state railway company also were dismissed, state television said.

The trains collided late Monday in Kazichene station, 10 miles east of the Bulgarian capital of Sofia. Eight passenger cars derailed.

Police said the passenger train had many children on board.

Judge was right to toss out ill-considered plea bargain

What an amazing spectacle: Twin Falls County's prosecuting attorney, who for years portrayed herself as a crusader against child abuse, arguing in court against imprisoning the mother of Amanda Hostetler.

Monday's episode left spectators unsure of whose side Prosecutor K. Ellen Baxter thought she was on.

Fortunately, 5th District Judge J. William Hart didn't share Baxter's apparent confusion.

From the start, the prosecution of Jodie Ann Hostetler and her boyfriend, William "Bud" Stradley, has been a muddy and confusing business. Was 2-year-old Amanda's death a rough-housing accident, as Stradley contends? If so, what about the more than 50 partly healed bruises found on the child's body and the apparent history of abuse dating back to before Stradley even joined the household?

The situation became murkier when Baxter struck a plea bargain with the mother, allowing her to avoid prison by pleading guilty to a single child abuse count.

To us, the bargain seemed both odd and premature. It ignored the possibility of a deeper complicity by Hostetler in her daughter's death, and it gave no surety that Hostetler would cooperate in Stradley's prosecution on a first-degree murder charge.

Apparently, Hart had similar doubts. Declaring that "justice will be better served by following my own conscience," he threw out the plea bargain and gave Hostetler a choice: She can either spend three to nine years in prison on the abuse charge, or she can take her chances standing trial.

Hart's decision is risky, to be sure. If Hostetler chooses a trial, she could be found innocent.

But Hart correctly concluded that Baxter's proposed conclusion to the case — two years of probation and some psychological treatment — was unacceptable.

After all, it was Baxter who went before Hart in April and argued that Hostetler was at least partly to blame for Amanda's death — that Hostetler regularly beat the child and left her unattended for hours at a time. "This child was neglected to death," she told Hart then.

Having argued that position, could Baxter really expect the judge to let Hostetler walk away virtually unpunished?

At this stage of the case, we won't say that Hostetler deserves prison. We won't even say that she is guilty of abusing her child. Those decisions likely will be up to a jury.

But we will say this: If Hostetler did abuse her child, and if she tolerated or contributed to circumstances leading to Amanda's death, then the sentence Baxter proposed was a travesty. Hart was right to follow his conscience.

We only hope now that Baxter and her staff can mount a credible prosecution of Stradley, and perhaps of Hostetler. So far, we haven't seen much to inspire confidence.

Build piers for handicapped

There was a handicapped pier built on one of the Oster Ponds in Hagerman, which I thought was an exellent idea for those avid fishermen confined to sitting home and not being able to enjoy the fisheries that our great state has to offer.

There should be more access built for the handicapped at other localities. I am not handicapped, but the sight of the pier spurred me to write this letter, thanking them, that the disabled could also share our enjoyment of fishing in Idaho waters.

We have an abundant supply of trout and other species for everyone to share. Give the handicapped more access so they can enjoy the great outdoors that we take for granted.

Car swerves to kill beloved pet

This is an open letter to the person who was driving a faded green, older-model car by our place on Highway 30 east of Murtaugh at 1:30 p.m. the afternoon of Aug. 13.

I'm sure they'll never read this letter; callow people rarely have the intelligence, let alone be literate enough to read. Maybe someone will recognize who they are. They can then cut this letter out and add it to their scrapbook. They should keep it to show their 2-year-old children or grandchildren.

Son, I'm sorry; at 2 years old I have to explain what death is. We were sitting on our front lawn playing with your pet Debie. No longer will you be able to play with her, pull her ears or do any of the many things you loved to do with your Allie.

She was so patient with you. If you were rough with her, she would lick your face; or if you hurt her, she would get up and move. Never did she object to your expressions of love.

But, because of someone having a lark or whatever their excuse, she is dead. We buried her in the back yard this evening. I'm sure the person who swerved off the road so they could score a road kill really meant no harm. They were just having fun.

They didn't care that you were within 20 feet of her and felt the horrendous crunch and saw the right headlight shatter when it crushed the life from her. They probably didn't see anyone around, let alone a 2-year-old boy. So, son, Allie is dead. Now be a big boy, don't cry.

Editorial on Gritz misses truth

Your editorial Aug. 11 concerning Bo Gritz was typical of a liberal running scared when facts are presented concerning the IRS, Federal Reserve, and many other alphabet soup concoctions (FPA, OSHA, FEMA ...) that are unconstitutional.

For the record, the Constitution provides for government to be paid for by excise taxes, tariffs, and duties, and our country did just that — without astronomical debt — for well over 100 years.

Returning to constitutional financing of our government is not only a good idea; it is absolutely imperative for our survival as a nation.

For you to equate Bo Gritz with Hitler and anti-Semitism is equivalent to me saying – The Times-News writes and endorses the sleaze tabloids simply because you are involved in journalism. Get real. Bo isn't even close to being a racist. He served with and led men of all races and religious persuasions in the military. They entrusted their lives to each other in dangerous war situations in Vietnam. To claim he is even remotely racist is ludicrous.

Why not face the fact that this country is hungry for a return to constitutional government? We as a nation are tired of having tax-and-spend leaders that are literally breaking our backs. We are tired of a liberal minority forcing their form of big government down our throats.

Voters, in the final analysis, ask yourselves: Have you heard any of the other candidates plead for a reduction in foreign aid, and a reduction in any spending that would result in less taxes? Have you heard any other candidate pleading for the return of our POWs and MIAs? Have you heard of any other candidate who would honestly put America first, not subservient to the United Nations or the New World Order? Have you heard of any other candidate who is willing to expose the fraud of the IRS and Federal Reserve?

There's a cancer in our body politic. While not everyone knows its causes, most every American can smell it and feel its debilitating effects. Hurrah for a candidate with the courage to stand up and tell it like it is!

Join to support Bo Gritz

In the Aug. 11 paper, you printed a slandering editorial on "Bo" Gritz.

You referred to him as a Hitler, Neo-Nazi type. I don't know where you get your information. I strongly suggest you call someone who knows what they are talking about. Then don't go and twist and turn it all around for the people who haven't heard of him to read.

He does cause a little paranoia; he wants people to "wake up" and see what this new world order or one-world government can and will be doing to all of us. You Americans, you think you're free? You better get a copy of the original Constitution and Bill of Rights as they once were and read and reread them until you fully understand them and then say that.

Sure, some of the things he wants to do may sound ridiculous. It will be a big change for all of us, but what are the choices? The new world order - Bush and Clinton are both pushing that – as well as higher taxes, free trade, open borders; the list goes on and on. Bo Gritz is not for any of these things.

We, as Gritz supporters, all feel that if we don't all give him a chance to make a difference, in the new world order we won't have a chance. There will be no money because we will go to the cashless society, with the mark of the beast running it, and it has already begun.

Bo Gritz is not a Hitler, Nazi or Rambo type, he's just a highly trained and highly decorated Green Beret commander who has worked for the U.S. government and has seen what has been going on in the past and is still happening today. He wants to end wrongdoing!

When he becomes president, he will sign a contract that will say that if he doesn't do what he says he will do in his campaign speech, we as American people can fire him and we don't have to wait around to have if impeached like Nixon. This country will not have had such a good man in office since Thomas Jefferson.

There are a lot of people to obtain correct information from. Call Paul Victor at 733-5978, Ruth Young (coordinator) at 324-4979, Barney Staten at 829-5877, Floyd Barnes (coordinator) at 734-8005 or Bo's residential town at 1-702-723-5357.

There will be a Bo Gritz meeting tonight at the Twin Falls City Park at 8 p.m. All interested in listening and learning more are welcome to joins us as patriots.

Show concern for forests

What a pathetic commentary on Idaho citizens that the three Earth First! protesters recently arrested for fighting for the awesome Nez Perce National Forest - currently the site of two massive timber sales that will cut some 81 million board feet of lumber – were all out-of-towners.

At least 5 million taxpayer dollars, along with extra funds now being expended by the Forest Service for "countersurveillance," are being wasted for this gutless assault that will involve the building of 145 miles of new roads and obliterate more than 76,000 acres of roadless country within Mallard and Jersey Jack Roadless areas. Worse, the Forest Service, in a blatant attempt to stem public protest and media coverage, has extended the road-closure area to include the entire timber-sale area (nearly 150,000 acres).

Letters of anger need to be sent to Michael King, Supervisor, Nez Perce National Forest, Route 2 Box 475, Grangeville, ID 83530, and Dave Jolly, Regional Forester, P.O. Box 7669, Missoula, MT 59807. For more information, contact the Wild Rockies Earth First!, P.O. Box 9286, Missoula, MT 59806, or Yellowstone Earth First!, P.O. Box 6151, Bozeman, MT 59715.

Let's show the Forest Service that Idahoans care about Idaho too!

Intellectuals must be monitored

A recent article pertaining to the Mormon Church's monitoring of members who view themselves as intellectuals needs a clarification. The article had first appeared in the Salt Lake Tribune. The general tone of the article was that the church's leaders were somewhat off base in their actions toward intellectuals. The tone of the article is what needs clarification and perspective.

Sociologists have long noted that intellectualism and religion aren't usually compatible. About 800 years ago, Thomas Aquinas, a Catholic theologian, decided that their traditions needed to be cleansed of error and updated. He approached his work from a logic-and-reason basis. Afterward, some bishops complained that he had over-applied his intellectual powers and had stripped out too much of the spirit. St. Francis of Assissi, a hundred years later, reinstalled the lost spirituality over the objections of the intellectuals.

Maimonides, a rabbi in Cordova, Spain, about 100 years before Aquinas did a similar cleansing of the Jewish Torah using logic and reasoning as his basic tools. Many rabbis complained that he, like Aquinas, had stripped out too much of the spirit.

In recent decades, sociologists have documented and illustrated the negative effects of present-day intellectuals on religion. Peter Berger, professor of sociology at Boston University, speaks to this problem in many of his books. Berger illustrates that when theologians and church leaders accommodate intellectuals, the church is always the loser.

The distinguished magazine, Commentary, edited by Norman Podhoretz, carried an essay about two years ago that showed how Jewish intellectuals have taken religion out of the term "Jew."

Maimonides argued that a person faced with a dilemma must first apply all of one's power of logic and reason. If the dilemma still persists, then seek out him who speaks directly to God, breast-to-breast and mouth-to-ear. Professor Berger teaches us that such a person will never be found among either the intellectuals or church leaders who have accommodated themselves to the elite.

In view of the above and much more not cited, such as the present-day problems of the Catholic Church and its intellectuals, the Mormon Church leaders are not only quite correct in monitoring its intellectuals but have an imperative obligation to do so! The broad membership of the church should be thankful the leaders are fulfilling their obligations!

Don't criticize busy parent

Whatever happened to the "good neighbor" policy?

I am a working single parent trying to make ends meet. I have one 13-year old who helps the best he can. There isn't enough time in a day to get everything done that needs to be done and work the odd hours I work.

The problem is there is always someone in the neighborhood who has to cause problems. It starts with adults and children teasing the dog, then turning us in for "harboring a vicious dog," to someone sending threatening post cards in the mail and saying they will pour kerosene in the yard if I don't do something about the weeds.

They are always quick to criticize. The way I see it is when their house is free of dirt and weeds inside and out, then they have time to criticize someone else; but until then, mind your own business.

There are better ways to handle the situation. If they want to be – such as it is – good neighbors, offer a little help once in a while instead of constant complaining!

Jax rumor is untrue

It has come to my attention that a rumor concerning Republican candidate for sheriff, Mr. Jim Jax, has spread in Gooding County. That rumor concerns the termination of his employment at Wendell High School.

I taught with Mr. Jax for many years in Wendell. He was an excellent teacher, always concerned about the learning and welfare of the students. Jim was well-liked by teachers and students alike, as all will attest.

Jim was also the detective of the school. Whenever vandalism or the breaking of rules occurred, we could always depend on Jim to uncover the culprit or culprits. When Jim left school to become a policeman, we were saddened but not surprised, understanding that his first love was detective-type work.

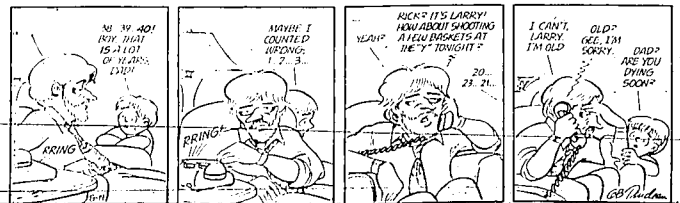

Jim left of his own accord, not because he was terminated. The superintendent and school board gave him their thanks and appreciation and stated that he would be difficult to replace.

I believe Jim will be an excellent sheriff. He is intelligent, honest and hard-working and has the best interests of the community at heart. I fully support him.

Allies will try to protect Iraqi Shiites from attacks by Saddam

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — For more than a year, tens of thousands of Shiite Muslim rebels in Iraq's southern marshes have waited for outside help to save them from the Iraqi army.

Now, the United States and its Gulf War allies appear to be preparing to come to their aid.

French Foreign Minister Roland Dumas confirmed Tuesday that the allies would try to protect the Shiites by forbidding Iraqi military flights in southern Iraq.

Iraq's Shiites, who make up more than 55 percent of the country's 17.5 million people, are mostly clustered in the south, the birthplace of the sect.

Saddam Hussein's brutal crackdown on the Shiites following their short-lived rebellion immediately after the Gulf-War forced about 200,000 Shiites to flee to the marshes, the only part of Iraq safe from tanks and ground troops.

Fearing that the highly politicized Shiite clerics who had links across the social strata could mobilize the masses against his Sunni-dominated government, Saddam launched a campaign to crush any opposition to his rule when he began his rise as Iraq's strongman in 1968.

His policies have deprived the Shiites of any real leadership, especially since the death this month of Grand Ayatollah Abulqassem al-Khoei, the modern patriarch of the faith.

While neighboring Iran, which is predominantly Shiite, is ruled by fundamentalist Muslim laws, only a small minority of Iraq's Shiites seek establishment of a strict Islamic state.

Instead, most Iraqi Shiite clerics have called for a more secular democratic government in Baghdad. Even Iraqi clerics such as Ayatollah Mohammed Bakr al-Hakim and Ayatollah Mohammed Taqi Modarresi, who live in exile in Iran, have kept their distance from Tehran's fundamentalist policies.

But despite the Iraqi Shiites' more moderate position, the United States has kept its distance.

Since coming to power, Saddam has executed dozens of prominent Shiite clerics and leaders, and destroyed many of their major religious institutions in Iraq's southern cities.

Saddam has pounded the Shiites in the marshes with artillery and air attacks in an effort to crush what has become a symbol of defiance to his authoritarian rule.

The failed Shiite uprising was launched in 1991 simultaneously with a Kurdish uprising in the north. But while the Kurds were given a Western-backed "safe haven" where Saddam has no power, the Shiites were left to fend for themselves.

An Associated Press reporter who spent three days in the vast marshes in April found thousands of refugees who had fled the cities for the marshes, scattered throughout the swamps.

Most were living in small groups on the thousands of islets. These are mostly covered by 10-foot-high reeds that hide them from Saddam's prowling gunships.

U.S. gears up to send Somalia aid

MOMBASA, Kenya (AP) — The United States prepared Tuesday to launch an airlift of food to starving Somalis within 48 hours, the start of an operation to deliver 145,000 tons of food in the next two months.

The amount of food the United States plans to deliver is almost double the total tonnage sent to Somalia since January by the International Red Cross, the United Nations and other agencies.

But because the U.S. team won't be involved in unloading and distributing the food, some aid agencies are afraid the ambitious American operation will create security and distribution problems.

"We've been working all along for the flooding of food into Somalia," said Tony Knight of the Nairobi office of Save the Children-U.K. "But if the U.S. is just going to dump the food in an uncontrolled fashion, it could cause more problems than it will solve."

Food is a magnet for the many bandits and militias roaming the largely desert nation. By some estimates, up to half of the 88,000 tons of supplies delivered to Somalia so far has been stolen.

War and drought in the Horn of Africa nation have combined to threaten nearly three-quarters of its 8.4 million people with hunger. Tens, if not hundreds of thousands, already have died, and aid experts estimate 1.5 million could starve within weeks if food is not delivered immediately. Nearly 4.5 million Somalis are malnourished.

Marine Brig. Gen. Frank Libutti is heading a 34-member advance team that arrived in Mombasa on Monday. On Tuesday, Libutti said the Americans would not handle the unloading and distribution of the food in Somalia and had not yet determined who would.

He acknowledged that he and his team weren't fully prepared for the logistical problems they face.

"We know where we're going and what we want to achieve, but we've got some homework to do," Libutti said.

When asked what would happen if marauding gunmen fire on U.S. planes or crew, the general replied: "If necessity demands that armed forces are needed to protect the planes and their crews, I would not hesitate to recommend it."

He did not elaborate. But a 500-man U.N. force of Pakistani troops is to be deployed in the capital, Mogadishu, in the next few weeks to help protect relief supplies and workers.

Libutti also said he would consider air drops of food to starving regions in the south if security problems prevent the planes from landing.

Some of the food has been donated and a U.S. firm has been contracted to sell an undetermined portion at low cost to Somali traders.

Pirated audio tapes discovered at fair

JEROME – Bargain-hunting music lovers beware – all that's cheap does not sound like solid gold.

Jerome County Sheriff Larry Gold said he confiscated 156 counterfeit audio tapes from a booth at the Jerome County Fair three weeks ago.

The cheaper "pirated" tapes are usually of lesser quality than their legitimate counterparts, Gold said.

The tapes ranged from the Charlie Daniels Band to Madonna, and were discovered during a routine check of the swap-meet type items sold at the fair, he said.

Officials from the Recording Industry of America Inc., confirmed that the recordings were counterfeit, he said.

Randy A. Crowley, 33, of Twin Falls will be summoned into court to answer to a charge of selling the bogus tapes, Gold said.

Gold warned future fair goers to examine tapes before buying. The plastic shrink wrap is different than that on legitimate tapes, and the printing on the cassettes is often smudged, he said.

Land Board defers Clear Creek decision

By Stephen Stuebner
Special to the Times-News

BOISE — After listening to high-profile lawyers debate high-priced property, the Idaho Land Board on Tuesday wound up with a "maybe" decision on how to deal with 683 acres of stand land in Blaine County.

The board voted 4-1 for a proposal presented by former attorney general Jim Jones that could wind up with the 683 acres traded to the Bureau of Land Management to protect wildlife.

But it's very tentative. Gov. Cecil Andrus voted for the deal, but only if the BLM decides the state land is worth $1.6 million. In the next four months, federal and state appraisals are to be prepared.

If they don't show that the BLM figures the state property is worth $1.6 million, Andrus said he will vote for a competing proposal from Ketchum real estate agent Heidi Baldwin.

Her proposal could result in a few high-priced homes built on what is now state land, with the rest of the land preserved for wildlife.

That's what the Idaho Department of Fish and Game wants.

"Wildlife is considered an extremely important component of the Wood River environment," said Carl Nellis, regional supervisor at Jerome. "Wildlife attracts people," he said, but it's rapidly disappearing from the area because of development.

Clear Creek runs through the property but Nellis warned that if development is allowed it will become "not so clear creek."

The Baldwin proposal failed on a 3-2 vote earlier, despite backing from Secretary of State Pete Cenarrusa and Jerry Evans, state schools chief.

It turned into a battle between prominent

Gov. Cecil Andrus congratulates Second District Judge Linda Trout on her appointment to the Idaho Supreme Court. She is the first woman ever named to the state's highest court.

Andrus' court choice leaves valley, east Idaho without voice

By Jim Wilkie
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Linda Copple Trout is a good choice for the Idaho Supreme Court, but an appointee from the Magic Valley or eastern Idaho would have been better.

That's what two prominent Magic Valley lawyers said Tuesday in the wake of Gov. Cecil Andrus' appointment of Trout, a 2nd District judge from Lewiston, as the first female justice in the 101-year history of the Supreme Court.

"I think it is distressing that (the region) has been overlooked," Jim Jones, a former Idaho attorney general who now practices law in Twin Falls and Boise. "In the last five to six years we've not only broken with tradition but we've destroyed it altogether."

The appointment of Trout to succeed Larry Boyle of Idaho Falls means that for the first time in years, there's no justice from either the Magic Valley or eastern Idaho on the court.

Although Justices Charles McDevitt and Stephen Bistline were both born in Pocatello, McDevitt hasn't lived in eastern Idaho since 1954 and Bistline left Pocatello for northern Idaho after he got out of Idaho State University following World War II.

"Obviously it's unfortunate that no one from this geographical area will be on the Idaho Supreme Court," said David Haley, Minidoka County prosecuting attorney-designate and president of the 5th District Bar Association.

Trout was appointed from a list of four finalists submitted to Andrus by the Idaho Judicial Council, including Twin Falls

Thief swipes police car with officer nearby

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Even police officers can be crime victims.

Just ask Twin Falls police Sgt. Steve Ryan, whose patrol car was stolen around noon Monday while he stood 20 feet away, taking a burglary report from a citizen on Wendell Street.

Ryan had left his keys in the car, Twin Falls police detective Dave Heidemann said.

The thief drove the cruiser for several blocks before abandoning it and stealing another vehicle, Heidemann said. This time, the victim was a Twin Falls man who was loading his golf clubs into his Volkswagen van.

His keys also were in the van, the detective said.

About one hour later, officials in Minidoka County reported an accident along the interstate, where 50 feet of fence was destroyed. The only sign of the vehicle was a license plate left behind, Heidemann said.

Just before 1 a.m. Tuesday, Cassia County officials received a call saying the stolen van had been spotted on Sublett Road near Malta.

A Cassia County Sheriff's deputy and an Idaho State Police officer found the van and arrested Miner Jesse Clayton, 23, of Laramie, Wyo., Heidemann said. He was booked into the Mini-Cassia jail in Burley on a charge of possession of stolen property, he said.

Swisher praises, urges support for hydro plans; lawmakers wary

By N.S. Nokkentved
Times-News writer

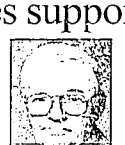

TWIN FALLS – It's not a question of if, but of when and what kind of hydroelectric development will happen on the Middle Snake River, says a consultant for a hydroelectric developer.

Former Public Utilities Commissioner Perry Swisher on Tuesday urged the Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce's environmental committee to support three proposed hydroelectric projects on the Snake River.

Swisher now is a consultant to L.B. Industries Inc. of Boise, which wants to build hydro plants at Boulder, Empire and Kanaka rapids, with a combined generating capacity of 15 megawatts.

The projects have faced stiff opposition from local residents. But the company continues, undaunted, to promote them.

The Idaho Water Resources Board, however, has denied the projects an exemption to the temporary protected status

Swisher

Noh

that prohibits developments in the Middle Snake.

L.B. Industries filed applications with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission for the three projects in July anyway. The commission – known as FERC – regulates private hydroelectric projects.

By supporting the proposed projects, Swisher said, people can make a decision on development in the Snake River that might otherwise be made by other, outside interests. Supporting the small projects would preclude construction of a larger dam.

FERC does not always make its decisions on hydro projects in line with state wishes. While the Magic Valley is discussing opposition to the projects, California cities are lining up to make FERC applications, Swisher said.

Cities such as Riverside, Burbank and Pasadena are hampered by air quality regulations in Southern California that limit the amount of electricity produced by burning coal or oil, he said.

If opponents succeed in blocking the three projects, FERC may grant a license to another project, Swisher said it would be almost guaranteed that FERC would "drop a license in the river" in spite of any state or local environmental or water quality concerns.

"FERC doesn't give a damn," Swisher said. Water quality is not the concern of FERC.

If L.B. Industries' projects show that electricity can be generated without damaging the environment, they would make the case against larger, more environmentally

Twin Falls schools, broker finalize $9.85 million bond sale

By Kirk Mitchell
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – School District officials Tuesday closed a deal with financial broker Merrill Lynch to sell $9.85 million in bonds for four new school buildings.

School Board Vice Chairman Dave Sommer, district Treasurer Dennis Messenger and district Clerk Rose Steffens signed the closing documents with Merrill Lynch officials on Tuesday.

The district will use the money it received from Merrill Lynch to build a new practice gym and auditorium at the high school, a new elementary school in South Park and a new classroom building at Robert Stuart Junior High School.

Voters approved the new building projects in an election on May 19.

Merrill Lynch won the right to sell the bonds in July with a low bid of 5.17 percent interest.

"We got it about one-half a percent lower than we had anticipated," Superintendent Terrell Donicht said.

Over the life of the bonds, that will mean property owners will pay about $400,000 less in interest than expected, he said.

The district will now invest the money until construction payments are due, Donicht said.

The earnings from those investments which could range from about $300,000 to $400,000 will be used to pay for unexpectedly high construction costs and for furnishing the new buildings, he said.

Donicht said the district will seek construction bids for the Stuart and high school gym buildings in January or February and begin construction in early spring. Both projects, weather permitting, will be completed by the beginning of the 1993-94 school year.

The district will seek bids on the new elementary school building next spring and begin construction as soon after accepting a bid as possible, Donicht said. The project will hopefully be finished by the beginning of the 1993-94 school year, he said.

It is postponing construction on the auditorium to give a committee hoping to expand the facility as much time as possible for fund-raising, Donicht said.

TWIN FALLS – The Federal Aviation Administration has OK'd the Twin Falls-Sun Valley Regional Airport's application for a passenger facility charge.

This means that the airport could start adding up to a $3 charge on passengers' round-trip tickets in November.

The charge amounts to a head tax on air travelers and airports of all sizes throughout the country likely will apply to use the charge. Up to four airports can tack the charge onto passengers' tickets, meaning up to $12 could go on a round trip.

Airlines will collect the fee, keep it for a month, and then turn it over to the airport. Airports can use the fee to help fund improvements.

Twin Falls airport officials hope to use the fee to help build a new terminal.

Local architect Harald Gerber on Tuesday estimated the cost of a 21,600-square-foot terminal at $1.7 million. This cost wouldn't include exterior work on the building, parking, or other items.

The figure is not final, he cautioned members of the Airport Board at their monthly meeting.

Gerber estimated the cost of building the public-use sections of the terminal at $918,000. But the FAA will pay for at least 75 percent of this total.

Public-use section include rest rooms, baggage areas, passenger waiting areas, for example. A bill before Congress would allow the FAA to pay for 85 percent of the public-use construction.

The private-use sections – airline ticket counters and offices, car rental counters, a restaurant, for example – would cost an estimated $891,000. The airport could use the passenger facility charge to help pay for about 70 percent of this, Gerber said.

Terminal tenants likely would pay higher rents to help pay the balance of the costs and Twin Falls County likely would finance the rest.

How the county would finance the rest of the costs remains to be worked out.

But Gerber's cost estimates prompted a discussion on the restaurant in the terminal. Airport board members and the business community want a restaurant in the terminal, but Gerber estimates the cost of providing space and equipment for one at $209,000.

"The price is climbing," board Chairman Mike Phillips said.

Phillips said he, too, wants a restaurant in the terminal.

But to make the rent affordable the airport likely would have to subsidize the restaurant and Phillips wondered how long the airport could afford an "ongoing subsidy."

Board member Kevin Trainor said all the terminal tenants are subsidized.

"The way I look at it, we're subsidizing everyone out there, including the airlines," Trainor said.

Another member of the board, Robert Newbry, agreed.

"I think it would be very shortsighted of us not to include a restaurant," Newbry said.

Former board member Gary Garnand urged the board members to keep the restaurant in plans. Speaking for the Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce, Garnand urged the board to consider helping the restaurant "as much as you can."

The chamber views the airport as a potential area of economic development, Garnand said. He hoped the board would weigh the cost of subsidizing the restaurant against the potential for economic development in the area.

Board members agreed to meet with the current restaurant owner, Kevin Owings, to see what he needs and wants in new terminal space.

Wolf introduction polarizes hunters, environmentalists

By Stephen Stuebner

BOISE – The wolf's eerie howl may be heard soon in Yellowstone National Park or central Idaho, but not if ranchers and some hunting groups have anything to say about it.

More than 50 Idahoans testified at a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service public hearing here Tuesday on the issue of reintroducing wolves to Yellowstone and central Idaho. As people spoke on the issue, an expanse as wide as Hells Canyon formed between wolf supporters and those opposed to bringing the endangered species back to the Northern Rockies.

And there was little middle ground in between.

"The purpose of this process is to determine how and when wolf recovery will take place, not if," said Ann Christensen, a Boise elementary school teacher.

Not so, said Fred Barnett of Nampa, who opposed the reintroduction wolves in Yellowstone and central Idaho.

"Can you imagine the public outcry when they designate Old Faithful critical wolf habitat because a lone wolf walked into the geyser area?"

The Fish and Wildlife Service will have to sift through highly polarized comments, develop a wide range of alternatives, and a choose a final recommendation by 1994. Tuesday's hearing was held to obtain public "scoping" comments for a draft environmental impact statement to be released in May 1993.

Most livestock and hunting groups opposed wolf reintroduction at the hearing, and environmentalists, teachers and others supported it. People on each side of the issue recited their own facts and evidence to support their point of view, but those on the other side often refuted them.

Jack Sweet of Meridian, for example, said wolves have killed about 100,000 whitetailed deer in northern Minnesota, reducing the herd by 71 percent.

"To release packs of federally protected wolves on deer, elk and bighorn sheep ... defies common sense," added Ron Geertson of the Gem State Hunters Association. "Using the same line of reasoning, we suggest that wolf advocates demand the reintroduction of rats in every basement, black-widow spiders in all public buildings and rattlesnakes in Ann Morrison Park."

'Politics' prohibit placing E 911 dispatch center in Twin Falls

By Phil Sahm
Times-News writer

JEROME – The bylaws of the regional E 911 system dictate that the central dispatch center be located in Jerome County or Wendell.

Why can't the dispatch center be located in Twin Falls?

"Politics," Twin Falls County Commissioner Marvin Hempleman said Tuesday night.

Gooding County Commissioner Bob Muffley said that when the E 911 board voted to place the dispatch center in Jerome County or Wendell, Twin Falls County was supposed to be getting a regional juvenile detention center and a regional landfill.

People in Gooding County get tired of sending their tax and retail dollars to Twin Falls, Muffley said.

But Twin Falls City Council members wonder why the dispatch center could not go in Twin Falls County if it were more cost-effective to locate it there. Also, Twin Falls County provides the largest share of dollars to build the system – $23,000 of the $35,000 collected monthly.

In a somewhat tense meeting, City Council members met with members of the joint E 911 board from Twin Falls, Jerome, Gooding and Lincoln counties Tuesday night.

Council members wanted details of the proposed system and cost estimates of providing one regional dispatch center or providing several dispatch centers. They wanted to know what kinds of "non-emergency calls" a central dispatch would handle – calls about downed tree limbs, backed-up sewers and other problems.

E 911 project manager Al Sandner estimated that a regional system can be built for $1.1 million and $68,000 a month to pay salaries and other overhead.

But Twin Falls Public Safety Director Paul Du Fresne said he thinks those estimates are too low. Du Fresne wants the region to consider a system with several dispatch centers.

The regional board plans to lease a building that fits the specifications for a 3,000-square-foot dispatch center. This would cost up to $300,000, Sandner said.

Du Fresne said this is unnecessary. He's offered part of the Twin Falls Police Department building not being used. But Sandner pointed out that by Du Fresne's own estimate it would cost $200,000 to remodel needed space in the police department.

A newer building would work better for future expansion, Sandner said. He said the region says can have an E 911 system running by next June.

Councilwoman Mary McClusky said the board should have invited medical personnel to the meeting to talk about dispatching medical services.

E 911 board members said they would gather cost estimates on alternatives for the system.

attorney Lloyd Webb and 6th District Judge Lynn Winmill of Pocatello.

"Lloyd Webb would have been an outstanding appointment to the court," Haley said.

In appointing Trout, Andrus continued his tradition of downplaying regional representation on the court. He first did that in 1971 when he appointed Robert Bakes of Boise to a court seat that had been held by a justice from northern Idaho.

Although Supreme Court justices face the electorate every six years, they usually get to the court by appointment and are seldom challenged for re-election. Until the Andrus era, there were usually representatives on the court from all regions of the state.

"The basis of the unwritten rule is that people make different kinds of livings in different parts of the state," Jones said. "A good part makes a living related to the land. Many take to the heart the value of water and the value of the land. This could tend to deprive the court of some expertise in the nuances of water rights cases."

Haley said Trout is a qualified judge but may not have enough knowledge in far-reaching issues of drought and water-rights allocations.

"Somebody who is from north Idaho probably wouldn't have the background in water issues," Haley said.

Jones agreed that Trout was a good choice and he said southeastern Idaho issues won't necessarily suffer as a result of Andrus' appointment. But he said a regional appointee's perspective would have reduced the chances of that happening.

"I'd like to see us get back to that," Jones said. "And I think a lot of people in the profession believe that's the way to go."

The last Magic Valley lawyer to sit on the Supreme Court was former Blaine County prosecutor Joseph McFadden, who was appointed by former Gov. Robert Smylie in 1959 and served until 1982.

damaging projects, Swisher said.

State Sen. Laird Noh, R-Kimberly, said Swisher was presenting a nicer picture of L.B. Industries than the company's lawyers have shown the Idaho Legislature. They have told the Legislature that it is FERC's business to license hydroelectric plants, not the state's, Noh said.

"Lawyers say what they have to say," Swisher replied.

But during legislative hearings this year, an L.B. Industries lawyer told lawmakers to go ahead and pass whatever law they wished. If the law got in the company's way, it would be the first to challenge the law in court, Noh said.

Many oppose the proposed projects because the river already violates state water quality standards. The valley's effluents have choked the river with sediments and aquatic weeds.

State Rep. Celia Gould, R-Buhl, told Swisher that nobody is under the illusion that the Middle Snake is a pristine river. But traditional uses could be jeopardized by more development, she said.

Declining water quality may limit the ability of farms, cities and hatcheries to discharge into the river, Gould said.

But the projects would not to affect water quality in the river, company spokesman Larry Faulkner said. They include no dams – diverting only a portion of the river to produce electricity.

Idaho Department of Fish and Game officials do not agree. They're concerned with oxygen levels, already too low in many parts of the river.

Water absorbs oxygen as it runs over rapids, and diverting part of the river's flow through the rapids could reduce the amount of oxygen absorbed by the water.

The three projects' generating capacity would be 15 megawatts. Idaho Power Co.'s generating capacity is 2,860 megawatts. A portion of that power is from hydroelectric plants, and the rest is from coal plants in Nevada and Wyoming.

A megawatt is 1 million watts, or the amount of electricity needed to light 10,000 hundred-watt lightbulbs.

Twin Falls irrigators net reprieve; Minidoka shutdown nears

By Clark Miller
Times-News writer

An unexpected boost of Snake River water is delaying the shutdown of the Twin Falls Canal Co. for at least a week, but two other Magic Valley irrigation systems are about to close their headgates.

An alternating shutdown of the Low-Line and High-Line canals will begin Aug. 31, instead of Monday, said Jack Eakin, acting general manager of the company.

"The way we were using storage water, it looked like we would be out by the end of August," Eakin said Tuesday. "Now it looks like we could make it until sometime in September."

After announcing its shutdown schedule last week, the company discovered its natural flow rights on the Snake River had increased from 1,800 cubic feet per second to 2,300 cfs, Eakin said.

That left the company with more water than it expected and prompted its board of directors to delay last week's decision.

"If we've got the water, we should be delivering it to the farmers," Eakin said. "The board will meet (next Tuesday) to look at the situation again."

Meanwhile, the Minidoka Irrigation District announced Tuesday that water deliveries will end temporarily on Sept. 1.

Leonard Scheer, manager of the district, said the canal company's directors will meet on Sept. 8 to decide when to resume delivery of water.

"At that time, they will decide if additional water deliveries will only be used to aid in the harvesting of crops or if sufficient water exists to expand the use of water," Scheer said in a news release. "The amount of natural flow available to the district will be a crucial factor in the decision."

Scheer said the Minidoka Irrigation District will have between 20,000 and 25,000 acre-feet of water in storage for delivery in September as the result of a temporary water exchange agreement between the Minidoka and A&B Irrigation districts.

The cost: $2.75 per acre-foot.

In return, the Minidoka district must transfer to A&B its first 25,000 acre-feet of water after the 1992 irrigation season.

In Shoshone, Wood River Canal Co. manager Dick Oneida announced Monday that the Milner-Gooding Canal will stop deliveries on Aug. 27 for 10 days and then resume deliveries for 10 days or until water runs out for the season.

Oneida also said the Big Wood Canal Co., which has been off for most of the irrigation season, will be turned on for a "domestic run" for four days, starting on Monday.

The domestic run will allow shareholders to fill stock tanks and water trees, Oneida said.

For the Twin Falls Canal Co., the latest schedule is: Low-Line Canal will shut down Aug. 31 to Sept. 9; High-Line shuts down Sept. 9 to Sept. 18 while deliveries resume in Low-Line. The two canals would continue running an on-off schedule into October, Eakin said.

Further delays can be expected, though, if natural flow rates remain near current levels, Eakin said.

For irrigators on the Twin Falls Canal Co. system, the sudden increase is in part caused by reduced consumption by Snake River irrigators above American Falls, said Ron Carlson, the Upper Snake River water master in Idaho Falls.

Farmers are no longer watering grain crops and many have finished irrigating their hay crops, Carlson said. Also, water from surface irrigation earlier in the season above the upper Snake has percolated through the groundwater system and is becoming available to Twin Falls Canal Co., he said.

Comparing 1988 and 1992, similar water year, Carlson said the company can expect natural flow rights to remain up through the remainder of the irrigation season.

On Aug. 16, 1988, the company had 2,661 cfs of natural flow rights and 2,593 cfs on the same date this year. From late August to Oct. 1 the company's natural flow rights remained between 2,000 and 2,500 cfs, Carlson said.

"I suspect they'll look at something similar this year," he said.

Rupert adds an extra police officer to force

By James Prichard
Mini-Cassia News Service

RUPERT – The City Council has approved an $8.5 million 1992-93 budget that calls for adding an extra officer to the Rupert Police Department.

For more than 10 years, the department has had 11 full-time officers, according to Police Chief Paul Fries.

Earlier this month, Mayor W.F. "Bill" Whittom called for the hiring of additional police personnel after a shooting at Neptune Park injured a Rupert man.

In that two-week period, Fries, at Whittom's request, placed additional off-duty and reserve officers at various gathering points throughout the city – including Neptune Park and Rupert City Square – in an effort to build up police presence and reduce criminal activity.

The effort has so far been successful, both men said during Tuesday's council's meeting. Whittom said that for the past two weeks, there has been "a substantial decrease in turmoil and problems" reported to the police department.

Fries said during that period, many people have congregated in the square, "but no incidents were reported."

The council's budget called for an additional $20,000 for the police department than was initially calculated, bringing the department's total budget to $600,000.

In other related matters, the city's total budget for the year was set at $8,576,936. Water expenses jumped $126,573 over the 1991-92 budget, to $567,200.

Councilman Dwinelle Allred said the added water department expense can be attributed to the city's efforts to replace its remaining 11 miles of wooden water pipe and set aside a contingency for additional sources of well water.

Developer wants to build 45 homes in area

By James Prichard
Mini-Cassia News Service

RUPERT – A local real estate developer who says he has built "hundreds" of homes in the Rupert area plans to build 45 more.

Phil Bare told the City Council Tuesday that he is moving forward with plans for a new subdivision that have been on hold since 1978.

The former Emerald subdivision, now to be called the Pinnacle subdivision, will be made up entirely of houses designed for middle-income families, Bare said.

Each residence will be between 1,100 and 1,800 square feet, sit on a lot between 8,300 and 10,000 square feet and cost from about $55,000 to $70,000.

The plat will be located in the vicinity of 100 South and A Street.

"There's a tremendous need for homes in this (the Rupert) area," said Bare, who was accompanied by his architect, Carl Leoni of Sun Valley.

The council agreed it would give Bare a letter of intent to allow him to move forward with the project, which includes drawing a final plat plan for later approval.

Bare did not say when the development of the area will begin.

Teddy bears join the Cassia County fuzz

By Eric Goodell

ALBION – Pat Gunderson doesn't want any old toy. It has to be soft and cuddly.

Gunderson is spearheading an effort by Albion American Legion Post 124 and its auxiliary to collect teddy bears and other huggable toys to give to children who have been through a traumatic experience. The toys will be distributed by deputies of the Cassia County Sheriff's Department.

Law officers, upon responding to a call where a child has been through a bad experience, will give the child a toy to keep. The soft toys have been shown to help calm a child when trouble hits.

Gunderson said she recently talked to a former state trooper from California who said the animals have a calming effect.

"He said the stuffed animal made a remarkable difference, to let the child have something to touch, cuddle and hold," Gunderson said.

Gunderson has received a few donations so far and hopes to collect an adequate supply so the group will be able replenish the ones which are given away.

Albion resident deputy Bruce Bristol is acting as a liaison with the American Legion and the sheriff's department, said Gunderson.

People can donate used stuffed animals, as long as they are in good condition. Money is also being collected to buy new toys.

The project is being spearheaded by Roland Gardner, chairman of the state Legion's Children and Youth program.

Ha. Jim Higgins said other service organizations in the area have conducted similar programs in the past, but he's glad the American Legion is participating because stuffed animal supplies were running low.

He said deputies say the program has been effective.

People interested in contributing may call Gunderson at 673-5350, Mary Amende at 673-6665 or Renee Smyer at 673-6642.

Woman injured in 1-vehicle crash

BURLEY – A Paul woman was critically hurt Saturday when the vehicle she was driving hit a pile of rocks and dirt and overturned, reports say.

According to the Cassia County Sheriff's Department, Lorry Ann Franks, 104 N. 6th 6th East, 30, was westbound on East 5th St. in Burley at 1:38 a.m. when she hit a pile of rocks and dirt that was partially in the roadway. The car landed upsidedown in the driveway at 420 E. 5th Street.

Franks was taken to LDS Hospital in Salt Lake City by helicopter, where she was in critical condition Tuesday, a spokesman said.

Heyburn youth charged with arson

HEYBURN – A 15-year old male was charged Monday with first-degree burglary and first-degree arson involving a fire which occurred at a home July 28, according to a police dispatcher.

The fire destroyed the garage of Dan Hellewell, who lives in the 1900 block of 14th St. in Heyburn.

Rupert Fire Chief Thayne Taylor and Burley Assistant Chief Dick Randklev helped investigate the cause of the fire, which destroyed a new boat and other items.

Taylor said it was a matter of looking at burn patterns that helped determine the blaze was caused by arson.

Man found in reported stolen vehicle

MALTA – Law officers arrested a Wyoming resident for possessing stolen property early Tuesday morning when they found a man sleeping in the back of a stolen van on a road four miles east of Malta, reports say.

According to the Cassia County Sheriff's Department, officers found Jesse Clayton Miner, 23, Laramie, Wyo., sleeping in the back of a Volkswagon van that was reported stolen in Twin Falls.

The vehicle had been involved in an accident earlier in the evening in Minidoka County, running through a fence. Authorities estimated the van had $1,500 damage.

Rupert fire nearly burns home, haystack

RUPERT – A fire about five miles north of Rupert almost burned the home and haystack of a Rupert resident, officials say.

Gary Higley of the East End Fire Department said the fire got out of hand Monday afternoon. It spread to neighbor Kevin Winn's house, coming within about two feet of it, said Higley.

It also stopped just short of a haystack.

"We were pretty lucky," said Higley.

Animal rights group hopes Idaho will halt lab expansion

MOSCOW (AP) — A Palouse animal rights group is objecting to the University of Idaho's expansion of its animal research laboratory and has asked President Elisabeth Zinser to halt the expansion.

Palouse Voice for Animals, Inc., in a letter last week asked Zinser to end live animal experimentation. It questioned the university's decision to spend $507,000 on the program while cutting things such as the Idaho Repertory Theatre this year.

Greg Brown, president of Palouse Voice for Animals, Inc., called the 2,370 square-foot expansion of the Laboratory Animal Research Facility a questionable fiscal decision by the UI administration.

"A half a million (dollars) is fairly significant," said Brown, a computer networking specialist at the UI.

"Especially when you think of some of the programs that have been cut like the Idaho Repertory Theatre and the alumni magazine — popular programs."

Vice Provost Jean'ne Shreeve said the expansion and renovation, which is almost finished, will allow Idaho to do more research projects.

Included in the cost is $100,000 for an emergency power system for the Life Science Building. The part of the expansion involving animals cost $463,000, and half of that came from the National Institute of Health.

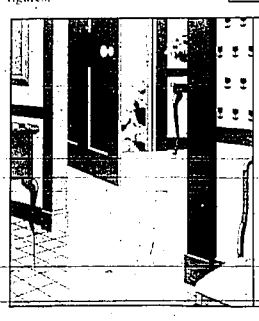

Brown said his group of about 30 objects to increased animal research for ethical and financial reasons.

The university's plan doesn't specify the number of animals to be added to the lab under the expansion plan. Shreeve said that doubling the size of the facility doesn't mean doubling the number of animals used.

The number of animals used in experiments at Idaho jumped from 3,361 in 1989 to 5,046 in 1990, the school reported to the U.S. Department of Agriculture. The number dropped to 450 in 1991 because the university stopped including rats and mice in its figures.

Democrats blast 2 for campaign law violations

BOISE (AP) — The campaigns of Republican Senate candidate Dirk Kempthorne and the man he wants to succeed — retiring GOP Sen. Steve Symms — were accused on Tuesday of conspiring to violate federal campaign finance laws.

In a formal complaint filed with the Federal Election Commission, Dan Williams, the attorney for the Idaho State Democratic Party, claimed the Symms campaign with its war chest of $185,000 contributed equipment, services and staff to the Kempthorne political operation in excess of legal limits and that neither campaign reported the subsidies as required by federal law.

The Kempthorne campaign, which has been under criticism from both within and without the Republican Party for its lesbian-subtle ties to Symms, had no comment initially.

But after reviewing the complaint, spokesman Mark Snider called it "baseless and false."

"This truly is much ado about nothing," Snider said, promising full cooperation of the campaign with any requests from the federal agency.

The allegations and complaint were lodged against the Boise mayor less than three hours before Kempthorne stood in the national spotlight, addressing the Republican National Convention in Houston.

Although he has repeatedly linked Democratic rival Congressman Richard Stallings to the scandals that have rocked Congress in the last several years, Kempthorne made no comments about political ethics in his nationally televised address.

A day earlier, Republicans charged Stallings with abusing his congressional free-mailing privileges to bolster his campaign prospects. They cited a National Taxpayers Union study showing Stallings used nearly $64,000 of free mailing during the first three months of this year — four times his three-month average during all of 1991.

Stallings' campaign officials said the bulk of that mail was to inform constituents about hearings the congressman was holding on various issues. They also claimed Kempthorne had benefitted extensively from free mailings Symms has made attacking Stallings. And they cited the nearly $90,000 free-mailing bill Republican Larry Craig ran up as a congressman the year before he was elected to the U.S. Senate in 1990.

But Williams said the charges he was making in his formal complaint rose above that kind of traditional political finger-pointing.

"What I'm talking about are serious violations of federal campaign laws," Williams said. "It's clear we've got an operation going that's taking advantage of the Symms equipment, paid staff, even the office itself."

Specifically, it alleged that from mid-September through October the Kempthorne campaign committee operated from the Symms campaign committee's suite while the Symms campaign paid the $500-a-month rent and neither reported the subsidy. But Snider said the Kempthorne staff did not move into the Symms suite until November when the Symms people moved out. The $100 a month Kempthorne reported paying in September and October was for separate space elsewhere in the building.

The complaint also said that while the Kempthorne campaign has reported spending more than $1,500 on computer equipment, supplies and repairs, it has never reported buying, leasing or being donated a computer. It said some of the equipment had old Symms campaign bumper stickers on it.

Reform panel wants districts to participate

BOISE (AP) — A committee working on ways to improve Idaho's public school system wants to make sure all school districts have a chance to compete for grants on pilot projects.

Next month, the Schools 2000 Committee will hold pre-bid conferences around the state to advise school officials how to compete for about $400,000 in funding for pilot projects.

At least six grants will be awarded, in the second year of an effort to improve the educational system. Starting Sept. 8, pre-bid conferences will start, and bid specifications will be passed out.

The last Legislature appropriated $2 million for school reform. About $1.6 million will be spent to continue projects started last year, with the rest used for new projects.

Idaho's reform priorities include improving student motivation and parental involvement, early childhood education, expanding the use of technology in schools, helping more minority students graduate and shifting state schools to a "performance based" system. It's designed to identify what students should know and be able to do by the time they leave high school.

The Schools 2000 Committee plans to send members to review the pilot projects now under way, both to see how they're doing and also to make sure school officials are aware of them.

The visits start Sept. 22 at New Meadows and McCall.

Gov. Cecil Andrus urged committee members to look at new ways of doing things, no matter how much it upsets the educational establishment.

"Quit trying to satisfy everybody in the professional education realm and worry about the kids," he said.

He said it's a good decision to put substantial amounts of money into pilot projects to see if they work. And he said if parents can be convinced the pilot programs help improve education, they will demand changes.

"To continue to put more money into ways that have not been successful is not the answer," the governor said.

"Continuing the same old ways we have used for so many years simply will not work."

Human Rights Commission launches new 10-point plan

BOISE (AP) — Increasing racial tension has prompted the Idaho Human Rights Commission to introduce a program aimed at recognizing and responding to the problems, the commission's director said.

"It's something that has to be dealt with and not swept under the rug," Marilyn Shuler said Monday. "We really think communities need to sit down and work on some things."

The program is a 10-point plan to help communities recognize and assess racial conflicts.

The Idaho Department of Law Enforcement reported 33 cases of hate crimes throughout the state in 1991. In the first six months of 1992, 24 cases have been reported, Shuler said.

Many of the crimes are against Hispanics, blacks, and Indians, but whites and members of the Mormon Church also are victims, the reports show.

Authorities believe racial tensions between Hispanic and white teenagers triggered the recent killing of a 15-year-old in Idaho Falls.

In Coeur d'Alene on Feb. 27, someone spray-painted a derogatory message on the car of a Mexican migrant worker. The car was parked at a motel and was the only vehicle damaged.

On Feb. 22, in Kootenai County, a 52-year-old Jewish man received a telephone call referring to World War II concentration camps.

Mamie Oliver, a Boise State University social work professor, attributed much of the racism and violence to economics.

"It's more of an issue of powerful and powerless," she said. "I think those added factors (cultural differences) contribute to people being stressed and uncomfortable.

Land Board OKs trade with paper firm

BOISE — In the final stage in a series of deals that started six years ago, the Idaho Land Board has approved a trade with Inland Empire Paper Co. that will give the state 1,430 acres of timber land west of Spirit Lake.

It's the third trade between the state and the company, in which the state traded scattered parcels to "block" up its timber lands.

The Land Board gave routine approval on Tuesday.

The state gets 1,430 acres of land with 15.4 million board feet of timber in exchange for 2,150 acres with 15.5 million board feet of timber.

Most of the parcels involved are west and south of Spirit Lake in Kootenai and Bonner Counties, with one state tract southwest of Coeur d'Alene and two pieces of land southeast of St. Maries in Benewah County.

Attorney requests delay of execution

BOISE — Attorney Nick Chenoweth, Orofino, has asked U.S. District Court in Boise to delay convicted slayer Mark Henry Lankford's execution date, so Chenoweth can prepare a federal court appeal.

Lankford, 36, Conroe, Texas, is scheduled to die Aug. 29 for helping his brother rob and kill two people in an Idaho County campground along the Clearwater River more than nine years ago.

The Idaho Supreme Court on Monday denied Chenoweth's request to delay the execution, so he immediately filed a petition with U.S. District Judge Edward Lodge at Boise.

"We anticipated it," Chenoweth said, of the Idaho court's rejection of his bid to delay proceedings six months so he can become familiar with the case.

Soil contamination poses no risk

PRESTON — Petroleum contamination of soil and groundwater in Preston poses no immediate public health threat, but a state regulator warns it could create economic havoc for the responsible businesses.

Scott Reno, water compliance officer for the Division of Environmental Quality, said it appeared six petroleum marketers are responsible for the plume of contaminants along the city's State Street.

And Reno said there is evidence of contaminants in the city's storm water discharge that could result in stiff penalties from the Environmental Protection Agency. Low levels of petroleum vapors were detected in one building as well.

"There may be an economic effect upon the community," he said.

Suspicious-looking barrels spark test

HENRY — State and Shoshone-Bannock authorities plan to test the contents of 12 suspicious-looking barrels found in the Blackfoot Reservoir.

"There could be some potential contamination," said Boyd Roberts, remediation supervisor with the Idaho Division of Environmental Quality. "We won't know until we run a test."

The barrels, Roberts said, were found partially embedded in muck below the high water mark, after irrigation water was drawn from the reservoir.

Roberts and Fort Hall Irrigation District representative John Parker plan to examine the barrels Wednesday.

Some processed foods aren't bad for kids

Processed food isn't all bad for kids. There's not a lot that's good, granted, but there are some healthful items, according to a study released by the Center for Science in the Public Interest.

Among the good foods: Kellogg's Nutri-Grain Wheat cereal, Post Grape-Nuts, Guiltless Gourmet No Oil Tortilla Chips, Weight Watchers Microwave Popcorn, Healthy Choice's frozen Macaroni and Cheese entree, Tyson Looney Tunes Pasta, FrozFruit dessert bars, Nature's Choice Real Fruit Bars, and Campbell Low Sodium Chicken with Noodles soup.

These foods, determined to be healthful by a special panel of health officials, have several things in common: No more than 30 percent of the calories are from fat (and no more than 10 percent of the calories are from saturated fat), a maximum of 2 milligrams of sodium per calorie and no more than 20 percent of calories from added sugar. Foods also could not contain MSG or food dyes, and other additives were not permitted.

Not surprisingly, not a single cookie, ice cream, granola bar, hot dog or luncheon meat met the test; all were too high in fat, salt or sugar.

Tuna tops list of fish eaten in United States in 1991

Tuna's tops when it comes to seafood consumption in the United States. For the fifth straight year, canned tuna fish helped propel that species into the No. 1 slot in 1991. Rounding out the Top 10 are shrimp, cod, Alaskan pollock, salmon, catfish, clams, flatfish (halibut, sole, flounder), crabs and scallops.

The truly surprising news? Just how little fish we eat overall.

Last year, Americans ate about 14.9 pounds of seafood per person. Not much, when you compare it to chicken (65 pounds) or beef (67 pounds) eaten per person each year.

The folks at the National Fisheries Institute, who work to promote seafood, say people still aren't comfortable with fish and shellfish — they're not sure where to buy it, how to pick it or how to prepare it — and that accounts for the low consumption.

Survey: Most people would eat what Jane Fonda eats

Imagine winning a contest that enables you to take home the weekly grocery basket of Jane Fonda, Sylvester Stallone, Madonna, Roseanne Arnold, Bill Cosby or Joan Collins. Whose basket would you chose?

According to an attitudinal survey by the Grocery Manufacturers Association, a third of the shoppers would take home Fonda's cart, while 26 percent selected Cosby's. Only 9 percent named Roseanne and the least number of votes — 2 percent — went to Madonna.

Puzzled by that answer, especially since Roseanne's basket probably would be piled the highest? Well consider that only 3 percent said environmentally responsible packaging was the most important factor in buying food. Seventeen percent said taste was most critical, 19 percent went for price and a whopping 44 percent said nutrition was the foremost consideration.

If nothing else, Fonda appears healthy.

Genetically altered produce doesn't entice consumers

Genetically altered fruits and vegetables could be on the market within 18 months, but the idea is getting thumbs down from most consumers, according to a recent survey.

Produce is being altered largely to increase pest resistance and improve flavor, but a Trillium survey of 1,000 consumers shows that only 8 percent think it's safe to eat genetically altered produce and only 6 percent would eat a piece if handed one. (So much for that pioneering spirit of Americans!) Almost 90 percent of respondents think there should be a warning label on such produce, but the Food and Drug Administration is declining to regulate these new foods, saying that the industry should regulate itself.

If you would like more information on the pros and cons of genetically altered produce, call Trillium at 1-800-800-8455. You'll be mailed a fact sheet and addresses you can contact for further background.

Chef Charlie Trotter, owner of the Chicago restaurant that bears his name, displays his eight-course 'Vegetarian Menu Degustation' that goes for $55.

Meatless meals catch on, even in 'meat-and-potatoes Chicago'

By Mary MacVean
The Associated Press

Fully a quarter of the diners at Charlie Trotter's elegant restaurant in meat-and-potatoes Chicago order the vegetable "degustation," at $55. Fifty-five dollars for what amounts to, French name and artful cooking aside, plates of veggies.

Neither Trotter nor his restaurant is vegetarian. Nor is he alone among cooks who are finding professional satisfaction and profit in produce, cashing in on vegetarianism's cachet as the politically correct, personally healthy diet of the moment.

"I don't work from the premise that these are vegetable dishes," Trotter said. "I work from the premise that these are great dishes." Great dishes such as truffled wild mushroom and root vegetable torte with parsnip puree and red wine butter, or braised French green lentil ravioli with vinaigrette.

No longer quirky, no longer the province of cranks or commune dwellers, vegetarianism has gone mainstream, and its cheerleaders are thrilled. They feel liberated and vindicated with each new health report praising plant-based diets, and rally around the arguments that our meat-centered diet is helping destroy the planet.

Besides, vegetarian food these days can taste pretty great, as chefs tease flavor from herbs and incorporate the tastes of India, Thailand, Italy or Mexico to satisfy even the most entrenched steak lover. Hippie-style lentil loaves and anesetic bowls of boiled greens are dishes of the past.

An estimated 8 million to 12 million Americans are vegetarians.

They are bankers in gray suits worried about their hearts, college students worried about the Earth, families worried about finding good, cheap meals, and people uneasy about the way many animals are raised in this country.

They can be a feisty lot, divided even among themselves over whether to eat eggs or drink milk, whether vegetarian convenience foods are acceptable, or whether produce must be organic.

When Jenny Collura, 32, who lives near Albany, N.Y., gave up meat as a teen-ager, she found people "mildly hostile" about her decision.

No more.

"Especially in the last five or seven years, people say, 'Oh yeah, I'm cutting down on meat,'" Collura said. "It's much more identifying with me rather than being threatened by me. Much more trying to assimilate what I do than trying to shoot down what I do."

For anyone who wants to learn, there's abundant advice and moral support in Vegetarian Times, paid circulation 200,000. Imaginative meatless meals can be found in dozens of cookbooks. A Vegetarian Times guide in 1978 listed 350 restaurants; in 1990-91, it listed more than 1,000.

In a Gallup Poll commissioned by the National Restaurant Association last year, a third of the respondents said they were likely to order vegetarian.

United Airlines serves 500,000 vegetarian meals a year (still a tiny slice of the 70 million meals it serves overall), and Lufthansa ads have bragged about its vegetarian food. Supermarkets sell tofu and meat substitutes. Earth's Best Baby Food markets six vegetarian dinners.

There are dating services for vegetarians. Most college cafeterias provide meatless meals. And, as this, after all, is the '90s, there are vegetarian support groups.

"It's a phenomenon. I never dreamed this would happen. I think it's significant, and I like it. It feels good," said

Vegetarianism has gone mainstream.

An estimated eight to 12 million Americans are vegetarians, and the numbers are growing with each new health report linking chronic disease to animal products and each argument that our meat-centered diet is helping destroy the planet. A look at the "new" way to save heart and earth:

Types of vegetarians

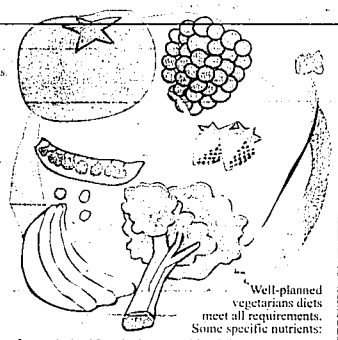

Vegans: Pronounced vee-gan. People who abstain from eating all animal products, including milk, cheese and eggs. "Ethical vegans" also do not use such animal products as leather or soap made from animal fat.

Lacto-ovo vegetarians: Eat no flesh but eat eggs and dairy products.

Pesco-vegetarians: Eat dairy products, eggs and fish but no other animal flesh.

What do you eat?

Not "just carrots and lettuce" anymore. Vegetarian meals can be diverse and delicious. Restaurants are incorporating the tastes of India, Thailand, Italy, China and Mexico to satisfy even the most entrenched steak lover.

Well-planned vegetarians diets meet all requirements. Some specific nutrients:

Iron: obtained from leafy greens, dried fruits (especially apricots, prunes and raisins), broccoli, wheat, peas and beans.

Calcium: abundant in dark leafy greens, broccoli, almonds, chick peas and soybeans.

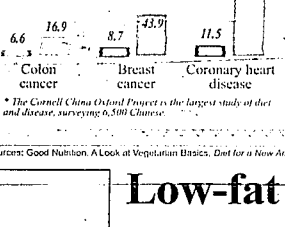

Vitamin B12: Obtained from dairy products and eggs. Vegans should get B12 from reliable sources: fortified foods like breakfast cereals or as a supplement.

What about protein?

Essentially, the same advice applies to vegetarians as to meat-eaters: Eat a varied diet, and limit fat and sugar. Potato chips may be meat-free, but they're by no means fat-free. Dairy products, grains, beans and nuts are all concentrated sources of protein. Cheese and peanuts contain more protein per ounce than hamburger, pork or porterhouse steak.

Meat and cancer

Preliminary results of a continuing study* suggest the risk of disease is smaller in China, where people eat little or no animal products.
Rate per 100,000 people:

 The Cornell China Oxford Project is the largest study of diet and disease, surveying 6,500 Chinese.*

Why? Some reasons people don't eat meat:

Health: Vegetarians generally are leaner than their meat-eating friends, have lower death rates from several chronic diseases, lower blood pressures and lower cholesterol levels. Only animal products contain cholesterol and saturated fat.

Environment: Environmentalists say American meat production overuses grain, water, land and energy; and also produces too much air and water pollution.

Cost: It's cheaper to eat a balanced vegetarian diet because it's cheaper to grow grains and vegetables than it is to raise livestocks.

Animal welfare: To animal lovers, the killing of another creature is all the motivation needed to become vegetarian. Also, some people believe that egg and milk exploits or abuses chickens and cows.

Mollie Katzen, author of the 'Moosewood Cookbook,' poses in her kitchen. She has revised the cookbook, a classic among vegetarian cookbooks, for the 15th anniversary edition due out this fall. There are dozens of cookbooks available now that celebrate the vegetarian diet.

Low-fat recipes fill pages of today's cookbooks

By Mary MacVean
The Associated Press

NEW YORK – A vegetarian starting out in the kitchen a decade or so ago would likely have relied on cheese and butter to make up for the missing meat.

"Moosewood Cookbook," the first "Laurel's Kitchen" and the "Vegetarian Epicure," published in the 1970s, guided converts to the countercultural meat-free life. But all three tended toward high-fat recipes.

"It's really easy to make something delicious if you put cheese on it," said Brian Houde, chef at the Nowhere Cafe in Los Angeles.

In her third cookbook, "Still Life with Menu," Mollie Katzen notes how fatty some of the recipes were in "Moosewood," published in 1977.

"We were a little shaky, sometimes, about the appeal of our cooking," she writes. "Those of us running restaurants, especially, felt compelled to win people over to meatless cuisine, which was still considered a fringe activity at that time."

The popularity contest was won with butter, sour cream or cream — the very ingredients that send health-conscious diners running for the "lite." Katzen has revised "Moosewood" for a 15th

'Friction, ridicule' often accompany lifestyle

By Mary MacVean
The Associated Press

Kim Powell was a graduate student when she looked at the Cornish hen she was about to have for dinner one night, decided she couldn't eat an animal, and went vegetarian "cold turkey."

The news certainly left her parents cold. They're cattle farmers.

Now, Powell has completed her doctorate at the University of Georgia in Athens, and she's moving back to meat country — Iowa.

Her dissertation was a natural: how vegetarians cope in a meat-eating world. But never mind the world. One vegetarian in a meat-eating family can be tough enough, both for the vegetarian and for the family sitting down to dinner with a member who suddenly looks on their chicken leg or meatloaf with disdain.

A child who decides to eat differently than the parents who provide the food or a vegetarian whose spouse eats meat can face anger and confusion. Some people feel threatened by a vegetarian's commitment or to the philosophy that motivated the diet.

Powell said her family initially wrote her behavior off as a phase, but her decision caused "friction and ridicule at family gatherings."

Over time, relatives adjusted.

Young people who give up meat often face a reaction similar to the one received by children who years ago came home from school and told their parents to quit smoking, said Sarah Schlesinger, author of "The Garden Variety Cookbook" and a professor in the musical theater program at New York University.

"I'm amazed at how many young kids are the only vegetarians in their family," she said.

Jess Row, who lives in Baltimore, decided to become a vegetarian three years ago, when he was a high school freshman.

"My family was pretty receptive, but not terribly. My parents were mostly concerned about nutrition and

Seniors' complaints cover old problems

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

EDITOR'S NOTE: Dear Abby is on a two-week vacation. Following is a selection of some of her favorite past letters from 1972 and '73.

DEAR READERS: Some years ago, I printed a "Confidential to Senior Citizens": "Some of my most fascinating and informative mail comes from senior citizens. Will you please send me a postcard telling me what your biggest problem is? Money? Failing health? Loneliness? Boredom? And if you have no serious problems, send a postcard telling me how you manage to stay happy. A million thanks!

— ABBY

Here's a sample of what they sent me:

DEAR ABBY: You asked senior citizens what their biggest problems were. Money? Health? Loneliness? Boredom? I can't speak for the men, but I can tell you that the biggest problems most women have are as follows: When a husband retires, he follows his wife around all day remarking on how she does the housework, cooking, etc., and none of it is complimentary.

Also, he never lets his wife go anywhere alone.

He has to tag along because his own interest in sex is waning, and he starts accusing her of seeing other men. In other words, husbands get jealous because they can't perform as well themselves.

Men retire, but we middle-class wives continue to do our regular housework because of our limited income, which has been worsened by inflation.

Doctors who see senior citizens will confirm the above, for which there is no solution at the present time. But with women's liberation, maybe the future will be better for coming generations.

I can't sign my name because all phone calls and mail are monitored here, and I'll have to carry this around in my purse until I can sneak it into a mailbox.

— TRAPPED IN FORT MYERS

DEAR ABBY: I try not to think about it, but my children are too busy to come to see me, and if I waited for them to call me on the phone, I'd never hear from them. My grandchildren are no better. They send presents once in a while, but the best present would be for them to visit me more often.

— NEGLECTED IN L.A.

DEAR ABBY: I am 67 years old, and I am crazy. I got this way taking care of my mother, who is 92. She is positively the most impossible woman who ever lived. Unfortunately, she is in better health than I am. I'd sign this but she'd kill me.

— STUCK IN ENCINO

DEAR ABBY: My problem wasn't mentioned in your list. It's impotence, which causes many of us men to feel depressed and dejected. We love our wives, but we can't perform. After the doctor completes our checkups, he smiles and says, "Sex is all in your head." That's humbug!

Here we are in Florida, home of the Fountain of Youth, but like Ponce de Leon, we can't find the well.

— READY, WILLING, BUT NOT ABLE

DEAR ABBY: I'm only a kid of 92. Do I qualify for senior citizenship? I don't have any problems, but I've got a lot of relatives who are going to have plenty when I die. I'm leaving everything to the church.

— GRANDPA IN PHOENIX

DEAR ABBY: I am 83 and have no problems. Death took my two good wives. Did not dare to try for a third. Afraid I'd get a lemon. I bowl in four leagues and enjoy church. I give better than one-tenth of my income to God because He lets me live well.

— ANDY IN JOHNSON CITY, N.Y.

DEAR READERS: This series of responses from senior citizens will be continued tomorrow.

To order Abby's new booklet, "Keepers," send a long (business-size) self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's "Keepers," P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Grandson sets sail for career with whales

Aging
Lucille S. deView

Great news. Zack is going to study marine biology in college. I knew he would, from the day he was 6, when we set out on a whale watching expedition in a small, wooden excursion boat, young grandson and I.

Mercifully, the Atlantic was as smooth and gray as a pewter plate.

The peak season for watching had passed. Still, we hoped. And waited. Then the lookout shouted. "Two humpbacks. Spout. Spout."

We heard soft, whooshing sounds as featherly sprays of water jetted into the air. Then the backs of two whales, like islands, heaved slowly from the water, cruised, then plunged. They waved behind massive, black tails with flukes that looked like two enormous white eyes.

They swam in tandem, rolling, spouting, rising, plunging, waving, each time drawing nearer. More humpbacks circled in a cetacean ballet. Their plaintive songs supplied the music — a mixture of moans, bellows, sighs.

We were in a pod of whales. The sea belonged to them. They reveled in it.

We could have been observers at the beginning of time, dropped into a primeval ocean — a hushed, misty, watery home to frolicking, primordial mammals.

Some part of our beings went out from us and entered their thick, slippery bodies, even as in the primitive paintings of Baffin Island Inuits, imaginary spirits enter the bear or the seal.

In our minds, we dived with the whales, swam with them, felt the coldness of the water, saw the green and black of it down deep. We were at one with the whales, the way a painter is one with a landscape or a sculptor one with a chunk of clay.

Then the lookout yelled, "Bubble." Beside the boat, a spot of green spread ever wider. Suddenly we heard an unearthly roar as the massive head of a whale burst up through the greenness, gobbling fish, water and all, the water spurting out but the fish held in by the fibrous strainer baleen whales have instead of teeth.

The whale arched and dived beneath the boat, leaving behind a deep trough of boiling, churning water. Our boat tipped sideways, rocked, then righted itself, and the ocean was empty and silent.

Zack's eyes were wide. He looked enchanted. And as we headed home, two killer whales breached, as if in a grand finale. Moments later, two loud cracks split the air as they hit the water in gigantic splats that reverberated like a roll of thunder.

Often since, as I drift into sleep, I hear those last, echoing, cracking slaps saying, "Save the whales." Now Zack will do that. And more.

Lucille S. deView, the writing coach for The Orange County Register, writes a weekly column on aging.

Gorman says thanks to Paint Magic volunteers

A sincere thank you to all the participants of the Paint Magic crew, sponsors, associate sponsors and the city of Twin Falls from Martha Gorman and her family for the beautiful job they did painting her home Aug. 8. Their tireless efforts are greatly appreciated. Most of the work consisted of painting the house but didn't end there. Paint Magic's well-organized group of volunteers prepared the house for painting, cleaned up the entire area following the project, trimmed the trees and bushes, mowed the lawns and cut the flowers back for fall. The porch swing was also painted to match the house.

She is thrilled and extremely appreciative with everything that was done for her. Their achievements are truly "magic."

It is hard to put into words the gratitude she feels for all their work, but let us attempt by saying again, "Thank you to each and every one of you. You are a fantastic and special group."

Dog Dolly's days go on due to help from passerby

In the early morning of Aug. 14, someone opened our gates and our little bulldog got out and ventured her way to Washington Street where she was hit and left to die.

The driver kept on going, but a man riding his bike to work cared enough to stop and take her out of the street and care for her until I could be reached.

A very special thanks to you, to the lady at the convenience store and to the veterinarian. Our little dog is home now and doing fine. Thank you for giving us back Dolly.

Q. You said hardly any children's toys date back as far as the American Revolution. Why not?

A. Play itself was thought unworthy. And playthings, unacceptable. Pets were all right, though.

Now try to say this one three times in a rapid manner: "Shy Sunshine Sue shuns sunshine."

Harvesters of hops in old Germany got extraordinarily tired after each day's picking. The beer brewers who hired them couldn't figure it out, and neither could anybody else. Until 1983. That's when scientists found in hops a tranquilizing chemical they labeled "2-methyl-3-butene-2-ol." Think of that! A thousand years of sedation, and not a clue!

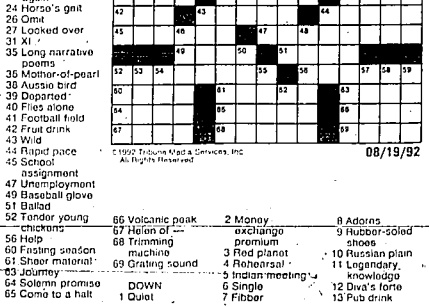

Q. How often over the long winter does a hibernating grownup black bear go outside for personal reasons?

A. There are bears and there are bears. Some frequently, wake up and wander. Others don't. The don'ts recycle. They can rest without relief for six months.

Q. Why does food cook faster in salted water?

A. It boils at a slightly higher than normal temperature.

Happy researchers studied the bodies of all the "Playboy" Centerfold models, and all the Miss America winners, too, from 1979 through 1988. To learn those women weighed from 13 to 19 percent less than women in the same age brackets generally. Those researchers also reported the American Psychiatric Association says 15-percent below normal is a criterion for anorexia nervosa.

A few vegetarian recipes to try

NEW YORK (AP) – Here are some vegetarian dishes that can be made as a meal or tried alone.

WHITE BEAN SOUT WITH ESCAROLE

From "Recipes from an Ecological Kitchen," by Lorna Sass (William Morrow Co. Inc, $25).

Escarole is a light green leafy vegetable related to endive. It has a slightly bitter taste, which is much loved by Italians.

Serves 6 to 8

Pressure cooker: 12 to 15 minutes high pressure, 10 minutes simmering

Standard Stovetop: 60 to 90 minutes

1 cup dried cannellini or Great Northern beans, picked over and rinsed, soaked four to eight hours in ample water to cover.

1 to 2 tablespoons olive oil

1 large onion, peeled and coarsly chopped

4 large cloves garlic, peeled and finely chopped

3 ribs celery, finely chopped

1 large carrot, finely chopped

6 cups water

¼ cup tightly packed minced fresh parsley.

½ to 2 teaspoons fennel seeds

1 head escarole (about 12 ounces), coarsly chopped (see note at end of recipe)

2 tablespoons tomato paste

¼ cup tightly packed minced fresh basil, or 1 tablespoon dried basil

Sea salt and freshly ground pepper to taste

Drain and rinse the beans. Set aside. Heat the oil in the pressure cooker and saute the onion and garlic for three minutes, stirring frequently. Stir in the beans, celery, carrot, water, parsley, and fennel seeds. If using dried basil, add at this time.

Lock the lid into place. Over high heat bring to high pressure. Lower the heat just enough to maintain the pressure at high and cook for 12 minutes. Allow the pressure to come down naturally or reduce pressure with a quick-release method. Remove the lid, tilting it away from you and allow any excess steam to escape. If the beans are not tender, return to pressure for a few more minutes or simmer, covered, until done.

Stir in the escarole, tomato paste, and fresh basil. Add salt and pepper to taste. Simmer with lid slightly ajar until the escarole is tender, about 10 minutes.

Standard stovetop: In a large pot, proceed as directed in step 1. Bring to a boil, reduce heat and simmer, covered, until the beans are tender, 60 to 90 minutes. Follow step 3.

Variation: You can substitute almost any green for the escarole. Try 1 pound of spinich, trimmed and coarsely chopped, or a half-pound kale or mustard greens, finely chopped. Cook the greens just until tender.

POLENTA WITH WALNUTS

From "Sweet Basil, Garlic, Tomatoes and Chives," by Diana Shaw (Harmony Books, $20).

Serves 6.

4 cups lightly salted water

1 cup cornmeal

1 tablespoon extra virgin olive oil

¼ cup coarsly crushed walnuts

1 tablespoon minced rosemary

Salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste

Bring the water to a boil, and sprinkle in the cornmeal (the Italians tell you to toss the cornmeal so it falls like rain).

Simmer on low heat, stirring often to prevent lumps.

Meanwhile, heat the olive oil and saute the walnuts and rosemary just until well coated. Be careful not to burn the walnuts.

When the polenta has thickened, after 30 minutes or so, stir in the walnut mixture. Keep cooking until the polenta is thick enough to stand on its own when pulled away from the sides of the pot, about 10 minutes more.

Serve hot as it is or topped with the sauce of your choice.

ZUCCHINI AND PEAS WITH BASIL

From "The Savory Way," by Deborah Madison (Bantam Books, $27.95).

A simple, tasty dish of beautiful green vegetables. The measurements don't really require exactitude. I've made this with a handful of pod peas, a few snow peas and sugar snap peas mixed in with the zucchini.

Serve this as a side dish or toss with pasta or warm rice to make a more substantial one-bowl meal.

2 to 4 servings

1 pound small firm zucchini

1 pound fresh pod peas or 1 cup frozen, approximately snow peas or sugar snap peas as desired

1 tablespoon extra-virgin olive oil

1 teaspoon peanut oil

salt

3 to 4 basil leaves, torn or finely sliced

2 mint leaves, finely sliced

Cut the zucchini lengthwise into quarters, then cut it into half-inch pieces. Shuck the peas if you're using fresh ones and remove the strings from the snow peas or sugar snap peas.

Warm the oils in a wide saute pan; add the vegetables and a tablespoon or so of water.

Salt lightly, add half the basil leaves, and cook over medium-low heat. Occasionally give the vegetables a stir.

When the squash and peas are tender, toss them with the rest of the basil and the mint leaves and serve.

cookbook writer Mollie Katzen.

NPD Group, a firm that tracks eating patterns, found that in 1980, 96 percent of households ate red meat at least once in a two-week period. In 1991, the number fell to 92 percent. The decline has been gradual but steady, said NPD's Harry Balzer.

"The driving force behind most eating trends is what baby boomers do," he said. "As baby boomers get older, there is one thing they know is going to happen. They are going to expire, and they will start changing their behavior to prolong the inevitable."

This change only trickles through the population, however, with no flood forecast. The United States remains solidly a meat-eating country. We eat, for example, 50 times as much meat as people in India, and five times as much as people in China, said Joan Dye Gussow, a nutrition education professor at Columbia Teachers College.

And while beef consumption is down -- from 94.5 pounds per capita in 1976 to 68 pounds in 1990, according to the American Meat Institute -- combined consumption of meat, poultry and fish is up, from 210 pounds in 1976 to 226 in 1990.

Once, vegetarians' health was thought to be in jeopardy, for lack of protein and iron in particular. Now, health experts nag meat-eaters, too, to watch what they eat.

Preliminary results from a major, continuing study of 6,500 people in China suggest the risk of heart problems, cancer, diabetes, osteoporosis and other diseases is reduced for people eating a plant-based diet, according to researcher T. Colin Campbell of Cornell University.

Experts say a well-planned vegetarian diet – even one without eggs or dairy products – can provide all necessary nutrients.

Even the very mainstream American Dietetic Association supports vegetarianism, although it and most health authorities say diets that include meat can be perfectly healthful and that vegetarians who turn to chips and cookies for sustenance aren't doing themselves any favors.

"It's fairly simple and straightforward," said Suzanne Bavalo, a dietitian who wrote the ADA's position paper. Anyone who gets enough calories, eats a variety of foods and few junk foods "can't go wrong," she said at the Second International Congress on Vegetarian Nutrition, sponsored by Loma Linda University and held in suburban Washington, D.C.

Vegetarians generally are leaner than their meat-eating friends, have lower death rates from several chronic diseases, lower blood pressures and lower cholesterol levels, the ADA says. This, however, may result from healthier living overall – more exercise and fiber, for example.

Environmentalists argue that modern meat production has contributed to global warming through methane gas emitted by cattle, to deforestation or desertification of land through grazing, to pollution by manure, and to world hunger as farmers grow feed grain rather than food grain.

And Jeremy Rifkin, fueled the cattle industry's scorn with his condemnation of it in "Beyond Beef," published in March.

Rifkin "wants to get rid of beef. We think beef is a good product," said Rick McCarty, spokesman for the National Cattlemen's Association, which counters just about every allegation the environmentalists make.

But even some environmentalists argue that livestock are compatible with a sustainable agriculture system, and even the Beyond Beef campaign, an offshoot of Rifkin's book, asks only that people cut their red meat consumption in half, not eliminate it.

Perhaps the future holds more people like those who meet for a monthly potluck supper in Arroyo Grande, Calif. They call themselves "Vegetarian Inclined People."

anniversary edition due out this fall.

But today there are dozens of cookbooks that celebrate the flavors of fresh produce and grains rather than using them in often-failed efforts to mimic meat.

"One of the things I wanted to show is the extraordinary bounty that is available to us without depending in any way on animal food," said Lorna Sass, whose "Recipes from an Ecological Kitchen" was published this summer.

Part of the appeal of vegetarian cooking stems from the popularity of foods from cultures in which economics dictate sparse use of animal products -- pastas and risottos, chilis or stir-fried vegetables.

Imported produce, ethnic populations and an efficient distribution system have resulted in many supermarkets selling produce previously available only in expensive specialty shops.

"Now you can get good produce in most places many more months of the year than you could before," said Diana Shaw, author of "Vegetarian Entertaining" and "Sweet Basil, Garlic, Tomatoes and Chives."

Here are some cookbooks that focus on vegetarian foods:

• "Great Vegetables from the Great Chefs," by Baba S. Khalsa (Chronicle Books, $19.95). Interviews with the likes of Julia Child, Andre Soltner, Alice Waters, Jeremiah Tower and Larry Forgione, combined with their recipes.

• "Life's Simple Pleasures," by Karen Mangum (Pacific Press, $24.95). Low fat recipes from a dietitian, planned by the season. Recipes include calories and content of fat, protein, carbohydrate, cholesterol and salt.

• "Moosewood Cookbook," "The Enchanted Broccoli Forest" and "Still Life with Menu," by Mollie Katzen. Three charming vegetarian classics, hand-written and illustrated. Reliable, inventive recipes, although some older ones may be too high-fat for some. Revised version of the first book due out this fall.

• "Quick Harvest," by Pat Baird (Prentice Hall Press, $21.95). Couples vegetarian cooking and the microwave oven.

• "Recipes from an Ecological Kitchen," by Lorna Sass (William Morrow Co. Inc, $25). A vegan cookbook (no eggs or dairy products), with recipes making use of the wok and pressure cooker. Documents how Sass herself eats.

• "Sundays at Moosewood Restaurant," by the collective that runs the Ithaca, N.Y., restaurant (Simon & Schuster, $16.95). Organized by ethnic menu, based on the Sunday dinners served at the restaurant. Interesting and unusual foods, appealing for entertaining.

• "Sweet Basil, Garlic, Tomatoes and Chives," by Diana Shaw (Harmony Books). The author of "Vegetarian ing" turns to the fresh fo cany and Provence.

• "The Na Gourmet," by Annemarie C untime, $19.95). From the t of the Natural Gourmet Cooking School in New York City.

Child: Even at 80, she makes herself at home in our homes

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) – Julia Child, the thoroughly American French chef, found the occasion of her 80th birthday to be too useful for just a quiet family reunion in Vermont.

This milestone became a public celebration in the service of her mission: ingraining in everyone the importance of good food, made well, shared with friends and family, and taken as seriously as any art.

Child recently walked through her neighborhood near Harvard with a camera crew, supervised two cooks helping with lunch for potential investors in a new television series, answered countless telephone calls, and posed for a photographer (holding a green ceramic bowl of "toh-mah-toes") — all before 1 p.m.

The birthday parties, mostly to benefit public television and the American Institute of Wine and Food, began weeks ago and go on through at least November.

So it goes for folk heroes — especially one who made herself at home in your home.

She made mistakes, but always with exuberance. You can't miss the point: This is fun.

Not particularly stylish, she never goes out of style. The thing about Julia Child is that she could be your neighbor or your mom — not too glamorous (though her sensible A-line skirts and blouses have given way to more fashionable attire), and not so superior that she can't curdle the mayonnaise.

But she can fix it, and she's eager to show how. She has obviously mastered her art, but even if you haven't, she has a rule: Never apologize for your cooking.

"She's a very opinionated lady, and that's what so refreshing. But she also is extremely generous," said Sara Moulton, who worked on the TV series "Julia Child and More Company."

And decidedly self-effacing.

Once, after an appearance on David Letterman's show, Child and colleague Susy Davidson found a crowd outside.

"I said, 'Sometimes when I'm with you, I forget how famous you are,'" Davidson recalled. "She said, 'You know, so do I.'"

As for an autobiography, Child says never. "It doesn't interest me. Nor do I think it would be very interesting — from stove to typewriter."

That assessment skips a few chapters: a happy California childhood, a stint in Ceylon in World War II and working as a clerk for the Office of Strategic Services; her remarkable marriage to Paul Child, a diplomat, photographer and painter whose work is everywhere in their house; their life in France; and her television career.

Peter Kump, who has known Child for 20 years and began the James Beard Foundation with her, says she was the brushfire that spread a love of good food beyond a gourmet elite.

Famed television chef Julia Child whisks a mixture in her own kitchen in Cambridge, Mass., during a recent interview.

It has been nearly 30 years since Child became "The French Chef," breaking into television and publishing. "Mastering the Art of French Cooking" has sold 2 million copies, and she has written six more books. The latest, "The Way to Cook," was published in 1989.

She considers her success serendipitous, due in part to the arrival of a French chef in the Kennedy White House and Americans' postwar interest in foreign food.

"I'm also somewhat of a ham, which is always useful," she said, sitting in her living room wearing a sapphire blue silk blouse, beige slacks — and red Nikes.

Lifestyle

whether I would eat the right foods," he said.

His brother soon adopted a vegetarian diet, too, and Jess cooks much of his own food.

But because many teen-agers don't have it so easy, Jess and some other teen-agers started a newsletter this year, "How on Earth," with help from the Vegetarian Education Network.

For teen-age vegetarians, "going out to eat with their friends is difficult," said Sally Clinton, who helped organize the newsletter. "You're so self-conscious as it is, and anything that makes you different is amplified."

A touring performance group, Youth for Environmental Sanity, or YES, talks to school groups around the country about the environment and eating lower on the food chain.

Ocean Robbins, 18, whose father is the environmental activist John Robbins, is a founder of YES, and, unlike most young people, never has eaten meat.

"When I was around 6 or 7, my mom and dad wanted me to try meat. They were worried about laying their trip on me," he said. "I got so defiant, 'I will not eat my friends, I do not want my body to be a graveyard.' So they backed down."

A new set of problems crops up when it's time to consider a mate.

Because vegetarians are a small minority, it can be hard to meet one another. But dating meat-eaters also can be difficult.

"It can be a real problem, like anything that's real emotional," said Jenny Collura, 32, of the North American Vegetarian Society. "It's definitely an issue among the single vegetarians I know. Would you date, would you marry a non-vegetarian?"

As a single mother living in rural upstate New York, Collura said it's tough to get a mate. "What's more important -- someone who's rotten to me and eats vegetables or someone who's nice to me and eats cows?"

In a recent issue of Vegetarian Times, eight vegetarian dating services were advertised, including Two-fu Vegetarian Singles Connection.

"The whole world is set up in a non-vegetarian lifestyle, so if you want to maintain a vegetarian lifestyle, it's difficult," said the founder of Two-Fu, David Rosenstein of Westwood, N.J.

For an annual fee of $60, his service offers a newsletter four to six times a year. It lists members, their interests and what they're hoping for in a mate. If one member wants to meet another, they write through Two-Fu.

The service is only 2 years old, Rosenstein said.

No marriages yet.

Extra dousing helps trees through winter

Allen Wilson
Gardening

Tree roots struggle to get enough water in the late summer and fall. All of the deeper soil moisture is used up and they must compete with grass and other shallow rooted plants for surface water. An extra deep watering around trees now and twice in the fall will make them more resistant to winter cold damage.

Most lawn irrigation wets soil only a few inches deep. It may require two to several hours with a sprinkler to penetrate two feet deep. Length of irrigation depends upon soil type and sprinkler type.

It requires about 2½ inches of water to penetrate two feet deep in a sandy soil. Heavy clay soils may require almost twice as much.

Unless you are flood irrigating into a basin around a small tree, it is difficult to tell how much water has been applied.

You can measure the amount of water applied by sprinklers by placing one or more cans within the sprinkling pattern. Turn the water on for a time interval such as 30 minutes. Then measure the amount of water accumulated in the can.

A soaker hose or sprinkler hose is an effective way to give trees extra water without overwatering other areas.

Most water absorbing tree roots are located a foot or so inside and outside the outer reach of the branches.

These roots are reached effectively by placing a sprinkler hose or soaker hose in a circle around the outer edge of the branches. If the sprinkler hose is turned upside down so that the holes face downward, water is concentrated in a narrow band. Because sprinkler and soaker hoses apply water at a very slow rate, they must be left on for several hours to penetrate two feet deep.

Plants can be overirrigated as well as underirrigated, especially if the irrigation system applies water faster than the soil can absorb it. Extra water accumulates in low areas and plants in those areas can be drowned.

Plant roots need air as well as water to thrive. If all the soil air is displaced by water, plant roots cannot get enough oxygen to function normally. Root and crown rot diseases can develop more readily in overwatered soil.

Except for recently planted trees, it is best to avoid overwetting soil right next to the trunk. Place a slight mound of soil next to the trunk so excess moisture does not accumulate there.

Textured paint improves look of damaged walls

Do it yourself
Gene Austin

Q. The ceiling in our condominium is masonry with joint lines at intervals. We'd like to even out the ceiling and give it a better appearance. Can this be done with paint?

O. Grupp.

A. There are several approaches that could be taken. For example, for a perfectly smooth appearance, the ceiling probably could be plastered or refinished with drywall over furring strips. Either of those methods would be fairly tricky and should be done by an experienced contractor.

A do-it-yourself approach would be to use a latex-based textured paint, usually called texture paint or sand paint. These are heavy-bodied paints sold at some home centers and paint stores. They often have a sandy finish and can be given different patterns using various tools.

Because of the thick consistency, a texture paint will conceal minor irregularities, such as small cracks or depressions, and give a uniform appearance.

Fairbanks slips into top 10 of NASCAR regional standings

SCOTTS VALLEY, Calif. — Bidding for a top five finish, rookie pro stock competitor Darin Fairbanks of Twin Falls cracked the Pacific Coast Region championship standings in the NASCAR Winston Racing Series.

Fairbanks, a second generation driver at Magic Valley Speedway, counts eight victories entering the season's final three weeks.

Twelfth entering week 19, Fairbanks moved to 10th. Despite being 303 points out of the top five, he will be ahloe to close that gap by winning his next two starts. Fairbanks has just 18 starts, compared with the more than 30 by the regional leaders who now must better previous finishes to increase point totals.

Fairbanks has eight wins in his 18 starts with 15 finishes in the top five.

Eddie McKean of Jerome stands 16th in the rankings.

Ex-Yankees pitcher Howe draws probation for drugs

MISSOULA, Mont. — Former New York Yankees pitcher Steve Howe will spend the next three years on probation for trying to buy a gram of cocaine from an undercover agent, a federal judge ruled Tuesday.

U.S. Magistrate Bart Erickson also fined Howe the minimum $1,000, ordered him to perform 100 hours of community service and imposed a series of standard conditions for probation.

Larry Bird retires

The Associated Press

BOSTON — Rarely outdone by opponents, Larry Bird was finally beaten by his own body.

A basketball artist with blue-collar work habits, Bird raised the game to new heights but left it Tuesday with little concern for his place in history.

Still a threat to flick a deadly pass or feather home a rainbow 3-pointer, it was agony, not ability, that ended Bird's career.

His balky back, a source of intense pain the past two years, forced him into retirement, ending a 13-year NBA career with the Boston Celtics spanning a basketball generation that saw the league reach unprecedented popularity and undreamed of riches.

He left amid a torrent of tributes for his unique abilities and handled it in the usual aw-shucks, Hoosier manner of a country boy who simply happened to be great at doing something he loved.

"I don't know where I'm at," he said of his role in basketball history. "It doesn't really matter. I just know that I played against some of the best basketball players in the world and I did pretty fair against them."

"I played as hard as I could," he added at a news conference at which he shed no tears but at times appeared to be choked up. "I wasn't going to let an injury stop me from diving on the floor to try to do everything that I was capable of doing to win a basketball game, and that's all I want to be remembered for."

Sorry, Larry.

There's no forgetting all those brilliant achievements.

How about being rookie of the year in 1980, those consecutive most valuable player awards in 1984, 1985 and 1986, or those NBA titles in 1981, 1984 and 1986?

Larry Bird leaves behind a string of remarkable achievements during his NBA years.

How about taking the Celtics from a 29-53 record the season before he arrived to a 61-21 mark as a rookie and a championship in his second year?

How about the numerous crunch-time shots that won critical games, those unbelievable passes or that relentless rebounding despite little jumping ability?

How about your career averages of 24.3 points per game, 10 rebounds and 6.3 assists or your career total of 21,791 points, 11th on the alltime list?

And how about those marquee matchups in three NBA Finals with Magic Johnson, your smiling, buoyant partner in propping up the league?

Now both are out of the game, although Johnson is considering coming back after announcing last November that he was retiring after contracting the AIDS virus.

"Larry was the only player in the league that I feared and he was the smartest player I ever played against," Johnson said. "I always enjoyed competing against him because he brought out the best in me. Even when we weren't going head to head I would follow his game because I always used his play as a measuring stick against mine."

Both 6-foot-9 superstars entered the NBA in 1979 and redefined their positions — Johnson as a big guard who ran a team like no one else, Bird as a slow-footed forward who was a peerless passer — and renewed their league.

"Saving the whole league?" Bird said. "No. I don't believe that at all."

During their era, attendance soared, TV money ballooned and salaries skyrocketed.

"Quite simply, Larry Bird has helped to define the way a generation of basketball fans has come to view and appreciate the NBA," NBA Commissioner David Stern said. "In the future, great players will be judged against the standards he has set, but there will never be another Larry Bird."

"He was one of a kind," said New York Knicks coach Pat Riley, who as coach of the Lakers went up against Bird in many memorable games.

Gross throws no-hitter

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Mudville was better off than last-place Los Angeles, with Dodger Stadium only half-full and hardluck Kevin Gross on the mound in an effort to avert the first Giants' four-game sweep on a Dodger home field in 69 years.

A pitcher of bright promise with drab results over 10 years with three teams, Gross ended the game in tears, owner of the only 1992 no-hitter in major league baseball.

In his 99-pitch masterpiece, including 71 strikes, Gross struck out six Giants, walked two and hit a batter as the Dodgers beat San Francisco 2-0 Monday night.

"Kevin couldn't say anything," Dodgers catcher Mike Scoscia said of the celebration after Mitch Webster made a running catch in left field to seal the victory for Gross. His own frustrations in 1992 have mirrored the Dodgers' season of woe, and he entered the game with a 5-12 record.

"He was out there crying. This shows how emotional he is and how much he loves this ballgame," Scoscia said.

"I think the ball probably had dents in it the last inning. I was squeezing it so hard," the 31-year-old Gross said.

Ticket sales sluggish for American Legion tourney

By Ron Gates
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - What if you held an American Legion Northwest Region 7 Baseball Tournament and nobody showed up?

It's not all that bad, but advance ticket sales for an event usually sold out well in advance of the first pitch have been a bit disappointing according to national representative Charlie Bannister.

"I don't know how they did today," he said after Tuesday's banquet. "We did sell some because of all the people coming in."

Rest assured that families and friends of the approximately 140 players and coaches representing seven states will be on hand. It does — to say nothing of the resulting boost to the local economy — present a once in a lifetime opportunity for baseball for Magic Valley baseball fans.

"It really is," Bannister added. "When you figure you're bringing in all state champions you know you have top of the line teams. I encourage people to come out. I've seen some of the best baseball of my life — and that includes major league baseball — right here at these events. When they come out, the fans will see what I mean and be back for more."

The five-day event, which Bannister says adheres to the same strict schedule and rules as are followed at the national finals, opens at 9:30 this morning with a contest featuring the California and Washington champions.

Montana and Wyoming follow at 1 p.m. and Lewiston, the Gem State titleholder, takes on Oregon's best at 4:30. Host Twin Falls closes out first round play against Alaska champ Anchorage East at 8 o'clock.

Coach stresses effort over talent

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — A lot of people have the talent for playing baseball, but the ability to evolve as a person and competitor within the game and life is the criteria of success.

Rick Sofield, University of Utah baseball coach, told members of state American Legion baseball championship teams that paradoxes — such as relaxed intensity — will be the keys that will determine success on the field and off.

"If you take every mistake you make to heart, you'll have a bad tournament," Sofield said, emphasizing that "having fun" and relaxing would be the difference from a well-played to a mistake-filled game.

"When you get tight, that curve hangs a little. Bat speed is reduced," he said.

Sofield also gave the players an insight into what a collegiate coach wants to see before passing out scholarship money.

"I'm not going to be knocking on your door, not going to recruit you if you don't play hard," he said. He added a team-oriented, hard working player offers much more to a coach and team than perhaps a considerably more talented player who is interested only in

Red Sox defeat California, 8-0

American League

BOSTON (AP) — Roger Clemens pitched a four-hitter for his 34th career shutout and took over the American League strikeout lead as the Boston Red Sox beat the California Angels 8-0 on Tuesday night.

Clemens (15-7) struck out eight for a season total of 164, moving him past New York's Melido Perez into the league lead. He also lowered his AL-leading earned-run average to 2.10 with his fifth shutout of the season, tying Tom Glavine and David Cone for the major league lead.

The Red Sox, who were on the verge of falling more than 10 games below .500 for the first time since 1966, battered California's Mark Langston (11-11) for five runs, 11 hits and five walks in five-plus innings. Mo Vaughn added a three-run homer in the eighth.

Blue Jays 12, Brewers 1

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Dave Winfield triggered a five-run first inning with a bases-clearing double as Toronto pounded Milwaukee.

The first-place Blue Jays increased their AL East lead over the third-place Brewers to 6½ games with a quick KO of Milwaukee starter Bruce Ruffin (1-5), who gave up five hits and five runs in one-third of an inning.

Jimmy Key (8-10) allowed one run and three hits in eight innings.

Mariners 8, Orioles 3

BALTIMORE (AP) — Rookie Dave Fleming won his 14th game and Jay Buhner and Ken Griffey Jr. homered as Seattle downed the slumping Orioles.

Fleming (14-5) took a four-hitter and a 4-1 lead into the eighth inning, but Mike Devereaux hit a two-run homer to pull the Orioles within one run. Jeff Nelson worked out of a jam by striking out Leo Gomez and finished for his third save and Seattle's third straight victory.

Buhner hit a two-run homer off Ben McDonald (12-8) and Griffey his a three-run shot in the ninth off Storm Davis.

Indians 8, Twins 1

CLEVELAND (AP) — Catcher Junior Ortiz got the better of two home-plate collisions as Cleveland twice cut down the potential tying run in the sixth inning and went on to beat Minnesota.

Glenallen Hill homered and doubled for the Indians, winners of seven of their last 11 games. The slumping Twins have lost three straight and 10 of their last 14.

Trailing 2-1 in the sixth, Minnesota hit two doubles and a single off Jose Mesa (5-9) without scoring a run. Cleveland then put the game away in the bottom of the sixth against Scott Erickson (8-10) when two runs scored on shortstop Greg Gagne's fielding error and another on Ortiz's RBI single.

Yankees 7, Athletics 3

NEW YORK (AP) — Right fielder Mel Hall made a diving catch on Carney Lansford's sinking liner with the bases loaded and two outs in the eighth inning Tuesday night, preserving the Yankees' victory.

Hall also had three hits and so did Don Mattingly, who hit a two-run double during a three-run eighth. Farr finished for his 18th save in 23 chances, preserving the win for Scott Sanderson (11-8). Mike Moore (12-10) was the loser.

White Sox 3, Rangers 0

CHICAGO (AP) — Jack McDowell outdueled Kevin Brown by pitching a six-hitter as Chicago beat Texas.

McDowell (16-7) joined Brown (16-8) as the top winners in the American League by pitching his first shutout of the season and his major league-leading 10th complete game. He walked one and struck out six as Chicago won its third straight game.

Tim Raines had three of the nine hits off Brown and scored twice.

Atlanta Braves beat Expos, 5-1

National League

MONTREAL (AP) — Charlie Leibrandt pitched a four-hitter as the Atlanta Braves beat the Montreal Expos 5-1 Tuesday night for their 14th win in their last 17 games.

Leibrandt (10-4) struck out four and walked none for his third complete game. He is the fourth Atlanta pitcher to reach double figures in victories this season, joining Tom Glavine (18), John Smoltz (13) and Steve Avery (10).

Ken Hill (13-6) made two throwing errors which led to three Atlanta runs in the third inning. Hill gave up seven hits in six innings as the Expos lost their third straight game.

Pirates 5, Padres 1

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Randy Tomlin held San Diego on seven singles over eight innings and Barry Bonds drove in two runs for Pittsburgh.

Tomlin (12-7) has followed a season-long pattern of being awful one month and awesome the next, a streak he's continued by going 2-0 with a 1.80 ERA in August.

Tomlin, who went eight starts before winning his 11th decision, was 4-0 in April, 1-3 in May, 5-1 in June and 0-3 with a 5.45 ERA in July. He has allowed just six earned runs in four starts this month, all of them Pirates' victories.

The victory gave the Pirates a three-game lead over Montreal in the NL East.

Reds 6, Phillies 0
Phillies 6, Reds 1

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Curt Schilling pitched a four-hitter as Philadelphia beat Cincinnati in the second game for a doubleheader split. Greg Swindell pitched a seven-hitter for his third shutout of the season as the Reds won the first game, 6-0.

Schilling (11-7) lost his shutout in the ninth on Bill Doran's RBI grounder. It was the sixth complete game for Schilling, who struck out five and walked three for his fifth win in his last seven decisions. He also contributed two hits and batted in a run against Rijo (9-9), who allowed eight hits in seven innings.

In the opener, Reggie Sanders, Glenn Braggs and Chris Sabo hit solo homers for the Reds.

Astros 7, Cardinals 6

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Pinch-hitter Ernest Riles singled in the tying run and Craig Biggio followed with a two-run single in a four-run seventh inning as Houston overcame a season-high three home runs by St. Louis.

Luis Gonzalez led off Houston's seventh with a single off loser Omar Olivares (6-8), who hadn't allowed a hit since the Astros' first. With one out, Juan Guerrero singled and Riles followed with his game-tying hit.

Mascot of '96 Atlanta Olympics draws fire; T-shirts selling well

ATLANTA (AP) — While T-shirts bearing the image of Atlanta's Olympic mascot Whatizit are selling briskly, news media critics are finding few kind things to say about the little blue symbol of the 1996 games.

Atlanta Olympic officials wanted an amorphous, genderless creature of imagination, a dreamer that could be anything it wants to be.

The world press latched onto Whatizit's ambiguity as a target for derision.

"Road kill," suggested Tom Knott of The Washington Times. "A little mutant monstrosity that was born in the toxic dump of somebody's imagination," observed Mike Downey of The Los Angeles Times. "It certainly wins a gold for ugliness," said The London Daily Telegraph.

The Washington Post dedicated Sunday's "Style" front to the "Dweeby Mascot" and a collection of put-downs from cartoonists.

Matt Groening, creator of "The Simpsons," said, "It will lower the average IQ in America by several points."

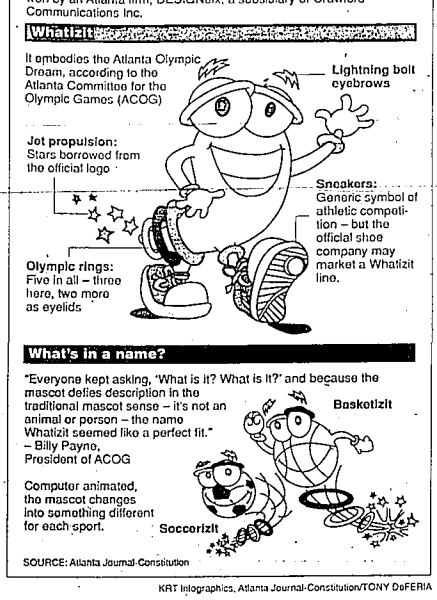

ABC anchor Peter Jennings evoked concern. "We did get a little anxious about their planning in Georgia when we saw the Atlanta mascot," he said, introducing an uncomplimentary segment on Whatizit.

Officials of the Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games profess not to be offended by the criticism.

"I think it's terrific that there is so much interest," said Ginger Watkins, executive vice president in charge of the mascot development.

Watkins also said journalists need to lighten up and have a little fun with Whatizit.

"People need to step back a little bit and say this is fun," she explained.

Auto racers know the dangers, but love of racing holds them anyway

By Sandra McKee
The Baltimore Sun

'Racers love racing; it's that simple.'
— Bobby Allison

One afternoon at Daytona International Raceway, Bobby Allison sat on a bench with me, following an accident that had cost the life of a young unknown rookie named Ricky Knotts, and tried to explain how men can race cars in the presence of death.

"Once, I was driving around this race track in a modified race, when my best friend, Don McTavish, crashed into the wall," Allison said, softly recalling the 1969 incident. "He had hit the wall with such force, the front end of the car had been torn away completely and he was just sitting there in his driver's seat, with nothing in front of him for protection. The cars were all blasting through the fourth turn and there was no way everyone was going to miss him. And everyone didn't.

"I was physically sick and I was crying as I drove on around the race track that day, but I couldn't stop. There was no way to stop. Stopping wouldn't have helped. It would have been like giving in to death. All I could do was drive on and pray for him."

Last Thursday, Bobby Allison lost his youngest son, Clifford, 27, in a crash during practice at Michigan International Raceway.

Friday, Allison's oldest son Davey, 31, his broken arm and wrist in casts from a horrendous 11-flip crash a month ago at Pocono, Pa., crawled into his race car and qualified third for Sunday's Champion Spark Plug 400 Winston Cup race. Sunday, Davey Allison raced. Yesterday, he returned to Hueytown, Ala., for his brother's services.

All of it made me think again of that February day with Allison so long ago. It also brought back memories of the Formula One season in 1978, when I talked to a sorrowful Mario Andretti, just back from Europe where he had won the F-1 championship the same day his teammate and friend Ronnie Peterson had been killed at the start of the race that had wrapped up the F-1 title. Andretti, his heart in pieces, had continued to drive.

And more recently there is the memory of last May's Indianapolis 500, when Michael Andretti drove on after seeing both his father, Mario, and his brother, Jeff, seriously injured in crashes. He drove, knowing his father was alive, but not knowing anything about the condition of his younger brother, knowing only that Jeff's car was totally destroyed.

Each of them had the same response, when asked why he hadn't parked the car.

"I just had to keep on driving," they said.

But why? Those of us on the sidelines have a very difficult time understanding the commitment that goes into a sport that on any given day, at any moment can rip out your soul.

A non-racer looks at the Allison family and wonders how they can go on. Bobby, who won the Winston Cup championship in 1983, survived a life-threatening 1988 crash at Pocono. That crash ended his driving career. He still limps and still suffers equilibrium problems. Bobby's brother Donnie saw his career cut short due to severe... ...ere accidents, and Davey Allison, who is battling for this year's Winston Cup title, has endured through four terrorizing smash ups this season that have caused neck, rib, arm, hand, collarbone and head injuries.

And yet the family continues to race.

"The Andrettis' commitment to the sport also seems beyond understanding. Mario has seen friends die and his brother, Aldo, suffer monstrous crashes. Mario Andretti's youngest son Jeff is living in an apartment in Indianapolis so he can be close to Dr. Terry Trammell, a noted orthopedic surgeon who is helping him recover from broken feet and legs sustained at Indy. And yet Jeff maintains his enthusiasm and his determination to be back in a race car by December.

"You hate to see anything like this happen," said Winston cup driver Hut Stricklin, who drives for Bobby Allison and is married to the latter's niece Pam. "We all know it can happen, but don't think it can happen to us. I'm sure Clifford felt the same way. ... It just happened at the wrong time."

Any time, of course, is the wrong time. But these men who are auto racers drive on. Why? Yes, big money and fame are motivations. But the bottom line seems to be that they love what they're doing. They know the risks and are willing to take them.

"A person can be killed anywhere," Bobby Allison said to me that February day. "The thing you always have to remember is no one makes anyone get into the race car. Everyone out here knows what could happen and accepts it. Racers love racing; it's that simple."

To auto racers it is the key element. To die doing something they didn't like, that would be tragedy. To die in the midst of the sport they love is living life to its fullest.

Still, it seems cold comfort to the families left behind.

New York Giants lose starters to injuries

The Associated Press

Every team expects a few injuries in training camp. No one expects to lose a half a dozen starters.

That's what has happened to the New York Giants, who recently added quarterback Jeff Hostetler, running back Dave Meggett and receiver Stephen Baker to their list of walking wounded.

Hostetler (hyper-extended right elbow), annoyed the Giants medical team by throwing lightly on Monday, coach Ray Handley said.

"They told him not to throw until there was no pain," Handley said. "He felt a little discomfort yesterday."

Meggett (sprained left foot) is improving, but still may not play this weekend against the Jets.

Baker sustained a contusion on his left wrist while catching a pass. He will miss a day or two. Receiver Ed McCaffrey will not play this weekend because of a sore neck.

Rookie defensive back Phillippi Sparks is not making progress recovering from a groin injury. Handley said it could be two to three weeks before he is ready.

Tackle Jumbo Elliott said his back was a little sore after his first workout in two weeks. Guard William Roberts said he felt fine after Monday's workouts, his first after experiencing a rapid heartbeat in late July.

BEARS

Receiver Anthony Morgan suffered a freak knee injury during practice. Morgan, the team's third-round pick a year ago, sustained a mild sprain to the medial collateral ligament in his left knee when he could not stop and slipped on the cement after finishing a long pass play.

"I was running a fly pattern and was trying to slow down, when all of a sudden my knee buckled," Morgan said.

Poor economic report figures into sluggish stock market

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The stock market finished broker in sluggish trading Tuesday despite losses in share prices abroad and a worse-than expected government economic report.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 4.50 points to 3,329.48.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines 6 to 6 on the New York Stock Exchange.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to a moderate 160.90 million shares as of 4 p.m., up from 152.77 million in the previous session.

Traders took their cue from rising bond prices. The Treasury's benchmark 30-year bond rose point, pushing down its yield to 7.33 percent. Treasuries were higher in the same economic news.

The Commerce Department said housing starts fell 2.8 percent in July. Construction of new single-family homes and apartments totaled 1.12 million at a seasonally adjusted annual rate, down from 1.15 million in June and lower than the 1.20 million private economists had forecast.

And share prices tumbled abroad. In Tokyo, the 225-issue Nikkei Stock Average fell 4.15 percent to its lowest level in nearly 6½ years. In London, stocks were also lower.

The U.S. market managed to end the day on a positive note.

There are no incentives pushing the market higher, traders said.

On Tuesday, the last few earnings reports and other corporate news moved individual stocks, but there was no apparent broad movement in the market.

Some analysts expected stocks to get a boost this week from the Republican convention.

The most actively traded NYSE issue was Kroger Co., which fell 1⅝ to 11¾ after the supermarket operator said it might only break even in the third quarter.

Among other actively traded issues, Toys R Us rose 1⅛ to 38⅛ after reporting a 61 percent jump in second-quarter earnings.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

BOBBY WOLFF

"Any fool can make a rule
And every fool will mind it."
— Thoreau.

Today's game highlights a bridge axiom that can be applied with few exceptions: "When dummy and declarer hold a suit of A-x-x opposite x-x-x, it's always right for declarer to duck at least one round, unless he fears a more dangerous shift."

The most frequent results at a recent duplicate were four hearts made or four hearts down one.

For down one, East put his club jack on West's 10 and South foolishly won, fearing a singleton with West. A diamond was led to dummy, and West rose with his ace to lead a second club. East cashed two clubs and shifted to spades. South still had to lose a trump trick — four tricks to East-West.

When South ducked the first club, he won the second and also won his game. Since the diamond ace was in the West hand, East never got a second club trick, and South held his losses to only a club, a diamond and trump.

A couple of declarers managed to go two down. They took the first club and led a diamond. West won and led a club, giving East two club tricks. East then continued with a fourth round and South ruffed with his 10. West wisely refused to overruff, reducing to one diamond instead. To go along with his prior play, South then missed his chance to endplay West and lost two trump tricks to earn his bottom score.
